North repair in jeopardy

Sole bid was 'miscalculated'

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The rush to start roof repairs at Newton North High School and avoid further damage hit a snag Monday when the only firm to bid on the job withdrew its offer.

David B. Lowrie, vice president of Galego Roofing Systems Inc., said the Middleboro company had made a "serious mathematical error" in calculating its base offer of $402,478 — approximately $160,000 less than the city anticipated.

In a letter to the city's Purchasing Department, Lowrie said his company misread dimensions on the project's designs and arrived at an unrealistic bid.

Purchasing Agent Blair Kanbar said the city is planning for a new bid opening Oct. 29. State laws stipulate the city must readvertize the project and give contractors time to formulate offers.

"You don't want to rush it," Kanbar said. "You want time for vendors to review the specifications and bid properly."

Building Commissioner James Cameron stressed the need to finish a portion of the work before winter because the cold causes roofs to contract while water expands when it freezes.

"We could get movement on that roof," said Cameron. "That could mean leaks."

Despite the delay, the commissioner said essential work could be completed without interruption if the winter is mild.

"It depends on the weather," he said. "If we have one like last winter, we're all set."

Consulting engineer David Adler of Simpson, Gumpertz and Heger Inc. — the firm hired to help the city draw up the project's specifications — could not be reached for comment.

The aldermanic Public Facilities Committee last week backed the city's request to allocate $664,000 for the repairs. The figure, which includes a contingency account and other expenses, must be approved by the full Board of Aldermen.

Kanbar said he was alarmed by Galego's low offer — around 27 percent below the city's base estimate — when bids were opened Sept. 19.

Such a low figure causes officials to wonder about a company's work performance. But the Purchasing Department investigated and discovered Galego has received high marks for three previous projects.

A Woburn official went so far as to say "Galego Roofing is one of the best roofers ... ever hired for the city," according to a summary of the department's investigation.

Partial tax bills out

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Estimated tax bills call on residents to pay exactly half the amount they were charged last year. But most likely this figure will not result in any bargain for homeowners.

Chief Assessor Robert Palmer explained Monday the estimated bills, mailed last week, do not take into account three factors which will show up in the second and final fiscal 1987 billing, to be paid this spring.

The second or actual tax bill will reflect the city's average 2½ percent increase in property taxes, any alterations to a home which affect its assessed value and this year's property revaluation, Palmer said.

Hanging on to 'the dream'

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — While Roger Clemens, Jeff Sellers, Rob Woodward and some of his other former teammates are on the verge of realizing their dream, Peter Cappadona still see a bit of a wait before his comes true.

"I think it would be great to drive down Route 9 to get to work," the 26-year-old southpaw relief pitcher says of the trip from his Newton Highlands home to Fenway Park. "I've been with the organization for five years now, and I would love a chance to play with the big club."

Cappadona, who just completed a "pretty good year" (2-1, 2.30 ERA over 55 innings) with the Sox AA New Britain affiliate in the Eastern League, says Fenway Park has always been his chosen destination.

"I was always a Sox fan," he says. "I lived here all my life, and this season has been great. I used to work one of the souvenir stands at the park and it would be a dream come true to play there."

The dream, he admits, may never come true.

"I didn't even get drafted," Cappadona, a standout starter at Newton South High School says. "I signed as a free agent after Sox hitting coach Walt Hriniak, who was a good friend of family friend Gary Mosca, told me to come over to Tufts University to throw."

But, before taking the Tufts mound, Cappadona says Hriniak warned him that a career in major league baseball was a million-to-one shot at best.

First of all, the tryout was in February, just weeks before spring training. Even if the coach liked him, Cappadona would have a long way to go before getting a ticket to Winter Haven.

"He gave me the longest pep talk I ever listened to," he says of Hriniak. "It was kind of discouraging, because here I was trying to impress him and he was telling me how hard it would be even if the Sox signed me."

After a 20-minute workout, Hriniak was impressed. A few days and a number of phone calls later, Cappadona was offered a contract. But, unlike the ceremonious occassion he recalled dreaming of, Cappadona says the signing took place in a Brighams ice cream parlor in the South Shore Plaza.

"There was no press conference, no hoopla," he says. "All I got besides the standard $600-a-month minor league contract was a gift certificate to McDonalds."

The first thing Cappadon learned in the minor leagues is that no matter how good you were in high school, you are nothing more than just another body in professional baseball.

"I was a starter in high school, as were most of the pitchers," he says. "The way it works in the minors is that the guys who they have plans for start and the rest of us they kind of stick in the bullpen until they figure out what to do with us."

Bigelow's fate up to the mayor

By Ken Brack
Correspondent

NEWTON — The fate of vacant Bigelow Jr. High School, debated by aldermen and School Committee members over the past couple of weeks, now rests partially in the hands of Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

By the beginning of next week, the mayor is expected to respond to a resolution drafted last week by the Board of Aldermen's Real Property Reuse Committee, which recommends granting community groups occupancy of the school for up to two years.

Mann also has the option of "mothballing" — keeping the school vacant — or using his discretion to insure that the school is used by a city entity such as the Library Department.

> 'The issue is the position we've been put in. It's a bad situation with everything being put on hold.'
> Ald. George Mansfield

The reuse committee, in effect, discharged custody of Bigelow to the mayor and the building department. The resolution's wording is intended to insure the reuse committee maintains responsibility for the conditions for the school's leasing.

"As in all reuse processes, it will be up to you to negotiate an agreement with the chief executive," Aldermen Paul Coletti told representatives from local artists groups and a public library trustee.

Community groups, such as the Kendall Center for the Arts, have been interested in leasing some of Bigelow's 5,500 square feet since the property became vacant in the spring of 1985.

Alderman Richard Bullwinkle and others said the school committee threw a wrench in efforts to lease Bigelow when it notified the reuse committee last week of possible plans to reclaim the school in September 1988.

This would occur if Newton decides to combine grade six and the junior highs to create a mid-

Painful alternative to sex education

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON — Dawn was a junior at Newton North when she found herself pregnant. For months, she wore the same blue jeans and bulky sweaters to school and walked around campus "wondering if anybody notices."

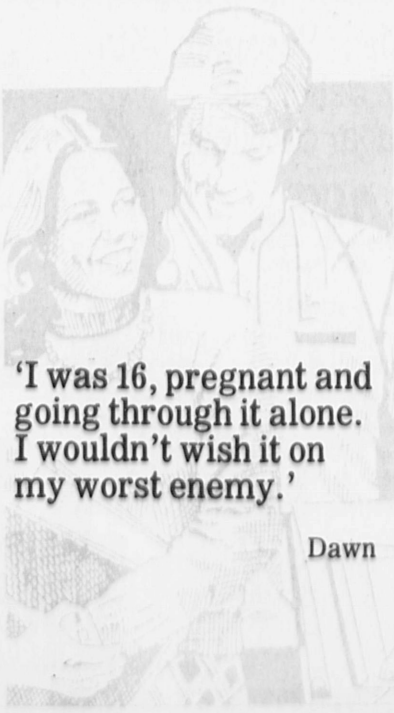
At Thanksgiving, unsuspecting relatives continually questioned her lack of appetite. And, after her abortion, the 16-year-old refused all dates for fear her partner would want sex.

"I was 16, pregnant and going through it alone," recalls Dawn, who is now a wholesome 20-year-old. "I wouldn't wish it on my worst enemy."

These are the consequences Dawn and many other Newton teens must pay for what local counselors say is their limited knowledge about sex and pregnancy.

"There's an awful lot of misinformation," says Susan Sawyer, director of the Adolescent Health Clinic in Newton Centre. "They have no good idea about what equipment they've got" and how their bodies work.

Although she had taken the required sex education classes in the Newton Public School system, Dawn, who requested her last name be withheld, says she did not think she could become pregnant when she used contraceptives on a limited basis.



> 'I was 16, pregnant and going through it alone. I wouldn't wish it on my worst enemy.'
> Dawn

The course covered "just the basics," she says. And even though her seventh grade sex education class stressed using contraceptives, "Kids in junior high aren't thinking about those kinds of things."

Even though a recent survey showed Newton Public Schools' sex education offerings to be superior to those of neighboring communities, local counselors agree that teen pregnancy is on the rise.

Vaunita Schnell, a guidance counselor at Newton North High School, counseled four pregnant teens within the first two weeks of the school year. And, over the past four years, the client load has increased at the Newton-based Alliance for Young Families, according to program director Ronnie Werner. The Alliance counsels pregnant girls who decide to keep their babies.

Nationally, a million teenagers become pregnant each year, according to recent studies. Of these, 4 out of 5 are unmarried and 30,000 are under the age of 15. If current trends continue, 40 percent of today's 14-year-olds will become pregnant at least once before they reach age 20.

A personal approach to drug abuse on the job

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — "Mario found out some of his employees are stealing liquor from behind the bar!" the restaurant manager said in a loud, accusing voice.

About 20 employees, squeezed together in a basement office, stared at him wide-eyed.

Finally, a girl stood up and admitted to knowing the culprits. She said she would tell her friends to return the liquor anonymously.

Then, in an effort to avoid further thefts, a bartender said he would designate one person responsible for retrieving liquor from the cabinet.

When Joan Green, who was running the meeting, offered her thoughts on the matter, the meeting was brought to an abrupt halt. "Whose problem is this?" she screeched.

It is everyone's problem but the thieves', she said. They are getting away with it, while the rest of the staff is working to stop it.

Her point made, the issue is dropped and employees relax. The focus of Abruzzi Companies' last drug/alcohol awareness workshop turns to drugs.

Young stars shine in 'Baby Olympics'

By Ken Brack
Correspondent

WATERTOWN — Neither bursting balloons, belated nap times nor a few wet diapers could put a damper on this celebration.

With parents, brothers, sisters and grandparents encouraging them, hundreds of babies and infants took part in a "Baby Olympics," at the Watertown Mall over the weekend.

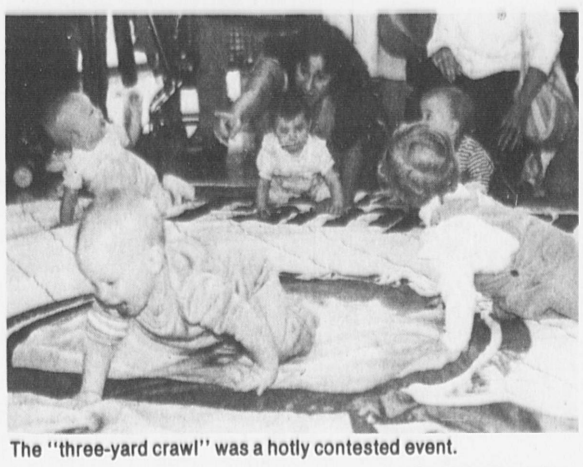
"It's been a little hectic for him," said Newton's Barry Goldstein of his 30-month-old son, Joel, a winner last weekend in one of the several rounds of ball toss — thrown into an empty Pampers box.

Like winners of other rounds in ball toss, bonnet tying, a 3-yard crawl and 5-yard "walk," Joel brought home a free two-week supply of diapers and a chance to enter a drawing for a six-month supply.

This was motivation enough for many of the parents attending the event.

"We've been in training at home for the crawl all week, using the hallway as a runway," said Anne O'Brien of Watertown, after her 12-month-old son Patrick won a heat. "He was exhausted."

"I could use two weeks of diapers," added Andrea Whalen of Watertown, as her 10-month-old son Dana won a heat of the 3-yard crawl.



The "three-yard crawl" was a hotly contested event.

"She's a born athlete," Steve said proudly. "We practice a lot."

John Darby of Watertown said the practice for the baby races certainly paid off. Of his 23-month-old son, Kevin, Darby said, "Even though it's his nap time, he stayed awake."

The celebration was staged by Procter & Gamble, which introduced Pampers 25 years ago and is introducing "Ultra Pampers" this year. Similar events were held in 25 other cities.

The sometimes delighted, but often indifferent tykes "competed" on a mat, surrounded by throngs of families in the mall's center. After each "heat," one or two participants were hoisted up, crying, in the arms of a smiling parent.

Alicia Hunzker of Cambridge said she and her husband, an MIT student, appreciated their 30-month-old son Kenneth's winning effort in the ball toss. "We're having a good time; this will help us poor students," she said.

But amidst the gurgles, yips and whines, it was clear many enjoyed the outing. Debbie McDowell of Waltham seemed surprised that she and her son Jacob, 5 months old on Saturday, had won in bonnet-tying.

"I think we came from behind because boys don't usually wear bonnets," McDowell observed.

After his 15-month-old daughter Rachel was selected as one of two winners in a bonnet-tying competition, Tom Goodale of Waltham asked, "How'd you manage to stay still for so long?" Rachel's mother, Janet, who tied the bonnet, said her daughter's win was keyed by "six months of practice."

According to Pat Stenson, manager of Watertown Mall, local merchants provided the prizes doled out at the Sunday drawing. Stenson on Saturday estimated several hundred babies and toddlers had attended.

"We're delighted to have this many kids and parents here," Stenson said.

As part of the event, babies also had their photos taken for free, balloons were inflated as fast as they escaped to the mall's ceiling and a 4-foot-long cake frosted with the Pampers logo was served.

Though he was "stuck", Cappadona says he learned to enjoy working out of the pen.

them know what my plans were."

Cappadona almost didn't make it this season. A sore arm led to his release, but when a Pawtucket player balked at being sent down to New Britain and quit baseball, he siezed the opportunity created by the extra roster slot and put in what he calls his best season.

'Ever since I was a little kid, and through my years at Newton South, I always wanted to pitch for the Red Sox. Who knows? Maybe I will some day.'

Peter Cappadonna

"It's fun," he says, "because they bring you in in tough situations when the game is on the line. As long as you get to take part, any position is fun."

Plus, the 6-ft-2 lefty says bullpen players were "a little flaky" while waiting their chance to get in the game.

"Any time you are not a position player, you have to wait," he says. "You have to do something to kill the time and we used to put on mannequin shows in the bullpen. The other team probably thought we were a little soft, but we and the fans had fun."

Unlike the sterotype of 20-hour bus rides, Cappadona says he never took more than a four- or five-hour bus ride in the leagues he has played in.

Despite getting paid to play ball, Cappadona says unlike a Clemens, most minor leaguers can get lost in the shuffle.

"I played with Roger for about a month in Winter Haven in 1983," he says. "I could tell right away that he was something special. He was 3-1, with 36 strikeouts and no walks. Everyone knew he would be in the majors some day soon."

Such was not the case for himself, Cappadona says. "It's kind of frustrating, because here I am, a lefty reliever and I am not sure what they are going to do with me. Before this last season, (New Britain Manager Tony) Torchia told me that I would have to talk to management and let Still, Cappadona says he realizes the mortality of a professional athlete.

"I was (upset) when they cut me this spring," he says. "When I see a guy like Tim Lollar, I know I can at least do his job for much less pay. But, I realize that I am 26 years old and I have been here for five years already. If I get to be 28-29 and I am still here, I don't know what I will do."

As is the case every year, general managers from most of baseball's 26 major league teams this spring complained of a dearth of left-handed relief pitchers — something that Cappadona says is frustrating.

"If I do get released by the Red Sox, I would like to hook on with someone else," he says. "The one thing I really want to do, and my only real goal, is to see how far I can get in baseball. One reason why I wanted to sign was that I needed to know how far I could go. If I am destined to be a Triple A ballplayer, then so be it. I just want to do the best that I can."

Reality aside, the mustachioed hurler admits that having a locker at Fenway would be ideal. "Ever since I was a little kid, and through my years at Newton South, I always wanted to pitch for the Red Sox," he says. "Who knows? Maybe I will some day."

Alternative to sex ed can be painful

This leaves adolescents — some as young as 14 and 15 years old — and their parents faced with some hard decisions. In Dawn's case, her parents had to decide for her.

Each time she asked herself whether to abort or keep the baby, she had a different answer. "I would say no, yes, no, yes. I couldn't really make the decision on my own, being that I never thought it would happen to me."

But her experience was minor compared to other teens in similar circumstances. For Catholics and other religious and cultural groups that emphasize chastity, any decision "is real difficult," says Sawyer.

Abortion is prohibited by the Catholic faith. Yet, when all is said and done, says Sawyer, studies show that Catholics get abortions as often as non-Catholics.

In fact, given the choice between taking birth control pills every day or getting an abortion, many Catholic teens will choose the latter.

Abortion may be "one big sin," says Sawyer, but "To take the pill is to sin everyday."

While, nation-wide, 55 percent of pregnant teens keep their babies, in Newton, roughly 75 percent of them choose abortion, according to Schnell.

As opposed to teens from poor communities, where most choose to keep their babies to reap welfare benefits, a majority of Newton teens are looking forward to college and careers.

But they still must suffer the trauma associated with abortion. It can mean dealing with angry parents or an unsympathetic boyfriend.

There is also a stigma attached to being a pregnant teen. Dawn lived in fear her peers would label her a "loose woman." She tried to hide her situation by wearing jeans and loose shirts and sweaters to school everyday. But, while walking through school corridors, she still worried classmates would notice.

Her boyfriend offered to marry her. "But I said, 'What are we supposed to do? This isn't fairytale land. There are bills involved here.'"

Although Dawn chose abortion, there is evidence that more and more Newton teens are choosing to keep their child, says Schnell. "Within the last year, more decisions have been made to keep a child than ever before," she says. The client load is also up at Alliance for Young Families, according to program director Ronnie Werner.

National statistics cite lasting hardships on teens' lives after having a child. Teen mothers are more likely than other women with young children to live below the poverty level. Only half of those who give birth before the age of 18 complete high school, as compared to 96 percent of those who postpone childbearing. The former earn half as much money and are more likely to be dependent on welfare.

Many teenage mothers in Newton face similar futures. "They end up poor and on welfare," says Werner. Their worst problem is finding housing in Newton, particularly if they are from economically "borderline families," she says.

In addition, according to Sawyer, teens are more apt to abuse their children because they are generally less understanding and tolerant of their baby's needs.

And they may be unable to provide balanced and nutritious meals since teens may not be eating well themselves. Sawyer recalled one girl who thrived on potato chips and coke. "She thought the baby could too," but "The baby died."

Teen mothers also risk losing their social network. While their peers are driving family cars to Bloomingdale's to buy new outfits, teen mothers living on their own or with their parents "feel stuck," Werner says.

They are isolated from their peers, and they may be in conflict with their family. The child's father may not stay around, and they can not go out with their friends on the spur of moment.

For these reasons and others, Dawn chose abortion. "I probably would have been able to handle (having the baby)," she says, "but I wouldn't have been able to go out on dates. I was still a kid myself. It wouldn't have worked."

Yet, four years later, she still wonders what sex the baby would have been, and in a way, wishes she would have chosen the alternative.

The little boy living in the downstairs apartment would have been a couple of months older than her own child, Dawn estimates. "I'm kind of envious."

In fact, over the past year, she has found herself wishing quite often that she had kept the child "because last November, (the father) died in a car accident. He was 21."

Lighting problems curb office rentals

NEWTON — The Building Department will not allow developer Michael Iodice to rent additional offices in his 29 Crafts St. building until he corrects a lighting situation neighbors say kept them up at night.

According to senior planner Gene Kennedy, the city has responded to neighborhood complaints by asking Iodice to turn off parking lights at the site until proper shields and lower-watt bulbs can be installed.

"Because the building looks down on the houses, there are going to be problems," he said. "We are going to wait for Iodice to install light shields, which will make the building conform to the zoning codes, before we will allow him to rent any more offices."

Kennedy said an initial Planning Department survey of the area revealed the light output did not exceed city limitations. However, the lights did "adversely impact" the neigborhood, violating one section of the zoning code.

The lights have been particularly bothersome to Tony Tambascio of 58 Lincoln Road, whose backyard faces the controversial six-story office building.

Tambascio thanked Mayor Theodore Mann for his help in getting the lights turned off, but added he wants something done to protect his neighborhood.

Herb Hiscock, project manager for Iodice's Chatham Development, said his company is working on a solution.

"We've ordered the shields that will make the parking lot lights shine practically straight down," he said. "That should reduce the glare. Also, we will install reduced-watt bulbs and we will place perimeter lighting that also will act to cut down the glare."

Stanley DeStefano of 54 Lincoln Road, said traffic has increased since office tenants moved in, adding the situation would worsen once the building reaches full occupancy.

Neighbors were opposed to the building even before it was constructed. There was a move among aldermen to deny the necessary permits on the grounds the building was constructed in a manufacturing zone. But the Law Department ruled that office buildings can be constructed in manufacturing zones.

That ruling was challenged unsuccessfully by Alderman Bruce Carmichael, who is now suing Iodice on behalf of the neighborhood in an effort to have the building torn down.

Pleads innocent of drug distribution

DEDHAM — A West Newton man and a Plainville man both pleaded innocent Monday to drug distribution charges after they were arrested in Dedham on Friday during an alleged cocaine deal.

Paul Haussman of 21 Shaw St. in West Newton and Marc S. Medwar of 16 George St. in Plainville were allowed to remain free on $5,000 and $2,500 cash bail respectively following their arraignment in Dedham District Court.

The case was continued to Oct. 27 for a pre-trial conference.

According to law enforcement officials, both men were arrested at 3:30 p.m. Friday in the parking lot of the Lechmere store on Route 1 in Dedham.

City offices get initial nod for computers

NEWTON — Two city departments have received initial aldermanic approval for the purchase of $62,000 worth of computer equipment.

The Legislation and Rules Committee (L&R) last week unanimously approved the purchase of seven Syntrex computer terminals, a move the city's solicitor and clerk said will make their departments more efficient.

"Right now, we have two outdated machines," City Solicitor Daniel Funk said. "With the purchase of this equipment, we will have three new machines that can really do the job. We will finally be able to join the 20th century."

Funk said Syntrex is a leader in computer hardware and software for law firms. He added that the needs of a law department are similar to those of the clerk's office, one reason why the two departments will share the equipment.

"With this system, it will make information retrieval easier," City Clerk Edward English said. "It will be easier for us to prepare board orders and do the other functions that take up so much time now."

Alderman questioned why Funk recommended Syntrex. Funk said research he conducted of major Boston-area law firms indicated that many prefer the Syntrex system because it is tailor-made for legal and clerical work. He added that Foley, Hoag and Elliot (FHR), L&R Chairman Verne Vance's law firm, has a Syntrex system. FHR, he said, spent thousands of dollars and nearly a year to research the company's background.

Another question raised concerned the fluctuating computer market. Alderman Richard McGrath suggested that Funk consider leasing a laser printer rather than buying the Hewlett-Packard printer offered by Syntrex because of rapidly advancing technology.

Under the proposal before the committee, English's office will get four terminals while the two departments will share the mainframe. The two departments will share some database, but each will have separate passwords to maintain security.

The L&R decision will face a Finance Committee vote before appearing before the Board of Aldermen. Vance said his committee voted on the computers because it is responsible for the Law Department and Clerk's Office.

Policeman's trial awaits chief witness

CAMBRIDGE — The trial of a Newton police officer who was charged with assault and battery of a Waltham man has been rescheduled for Dec. 8.

Assistant Middlesex County District Attorney Caldwell Harrop said the trial of Officer Brian Henderson, which was to have begun last week, was continued due to the unavailability of the state's chief witness, another Newton Police officer who is attending a training program in Chicago.

Henderson is charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, a police night stick, on Michael P. Colarusso, of 20 Derby St. The alleged incident occured after Henderson responded to a complaint of an altercation outside of 81 West St., Newton, about midnight of Sept. 27 1985.

New director of Human Services named

NEWTON — Lowell Haynes has been named new director of the Human Services Department.

Mayor Theodore Mann announced that Haynes will head the department, a position left vacant with the departure of Howard Lipton earlier this year.

Human Services, according to Mann, is an umbrella department made up of the Consumer Protection Division, Human Rights Commission, Council on Aging, Youth Commission, Environment of the Handicapped and other youth and senior citizen service organizations.

Mann added that Haynes was selected from 27 applicants. One reason for his selection, the mayor said, is his experience with human service organizations.

Since 1974, Haynes has served as Executive Director of the Newton-Wellesley-Weston-Needham Multi-Service Center. The center serves 1,000 adolescents and their families annually.

"Mr. Haynes took our youth outreach program from its embryonic stages through implementation," he said. "Programs like that have been a focus of our Human Services Department."

Haynes said his focus will be to help those in Newton who need help but fall through the cracks.

"There are large numbers of people in this city who need help but can't get it," he said. "I want to develop a coordinated effort to get those people help."

Among his priorities will be helping troubled youths, senior citizens and the handicapped, he said. To do that, he said he will "try to improve the relationship between various city agencies."

"The police play a valuable role in dealing with youth and human rights issues," he said. "Schools play important roles as well. Also, I have experience dealing with state agencies and I want to use that experience to benefit the people who need help."

Single-parent families and multi-problem families are groups who generally lack a support system, Haynes said, an area he would like to see improved.

Committee says no to Mobil self-service

NEWTON — The Mobil Oil Corp. will not be allowed to install self-service stations in the city if last week's Land Use Committee decision is upheld.

Committee members voted to approve Mobil's request to renovate two stations in the city. The approval, however, contained a provision that the oil company cannot convert full-service islands at the Washington Street and Beacon St. locations to self-service islands.

The decision may be moot. David Mofenson, the attorney representing Mobil, said he would not rule out the possibility of a legal challenge to the committee's decision.

Alderman Paul Coletti, a longtime opponent of self-service, said the condition will give aldermen time to vote on an ordinance dealing specifically with the issue.

The Law Department warned alderman that if they want to generically restrict or deny self-service, they would have to adopt an ordinance.

"You cannot apply a principle without having an ordinance," Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce said. "That was shown to us when developer Michael Iodice successfully challenged the 10 Percent policy that was applied in land use decisions without the benefit of an ordinance to back it up. If you do not want to allow self-service across the board, you have to put it into law."

Keep the post office in Lower Falls

Newton Lower Falls, once one of the more vital sectors of the Garden City, is on the brink of losing one of its few remaining resources, its post office. The lease is up on the present location and alternatives are almost nonexistent.

It's a sad commentary on the plight of our westernmost village, which already has been sliced and diced almost beyond recognition by a number of arterial highways. Nowadays, many people think they are in Wellesley when they cross Route 128.

The village's school was closed in the late 70's. Now its post office is facing the prospect of being driven out of its location as real estate, valued at so much per square foot, becomes scarce.

While city planners agree that our city's unique network of villages is remarkably futuristic, we are watching one of our oldest villages fade off into an almost moribund state.

What's to be done? Residents of the village say they don't know. They are stymied. They doubt the post office will find another building in their village center. They are already referring to its demise as a "fait accompli."

After years of watching the vitality drain out of Lower Falls, they are concerned but stoic about this latest development. We share their concern. Given the apparent lack of viable alternatives, we might eventually share their stoicism, although they have come to it over a period of several decades.

Let's make one last stab at it though. Could the city see fit to find some room in the old Hamilton School? The square footage could be minimal. Much of the work related to sorting the mail could be done at the main branch in Newtonville.

The convenience for some of the village's older residents would be immeasurable. And the boost to the individual identity of one of the city's oldest settlements would be crucial.

Revenue sharing versus deficit trimming

Not surprisingly, Federal Revenue Sharing is on its way out. Congress is well aware most states are doing just fine fiscally while the federal government it provides for is awash in red ink.

Thus, a $3 billion item to help debt reduction looms large on Capitol Hill, with concurrence from the Reagan administration. If consensus develops, as seems possible, states would be left to pick up the tab for funded programs or let them die.

There is validity in the approach, since adequate warning of a phaseout was given in each of the past few years.

Massachusetts has had revenue sharing of its own in the steady growth of local aid since Proposition 2 1/2 came onto scene in 1982. Municipalities had their spending limit tied to the percentage in assessed valuations at that time. Only the infusion of state money could enable them to maintain services.

An economy which is slowing only to a moderate degree in this region indicates Massachusetts will not be suffering unduly from the U.S. funding pullback. Conversely, the problem has been what to do with a surplus that was in excess of a half billion dollars at the end of fiscal 1986 on June 30 and will continue, say the analysts. Such wealth is behind the major drive to put a lid on tax revenue by the high tech industry and CLT's Barbara Anderson.

Their joint initiative petition to tie increases in state collection to the three-year average of Massachusetts' wages and hours calls for a return of surplus to taxpayers. Thus, the Legislature will find itself with a need to establish spending priorities within the framework of anticipated income.

We applaud the objectives of Question No. 3 on the November ballot, conscious there is little likelihood a surplus will exist as a bonanza for taxpayers. Local aid pressures and those projects finding House-Senate favor will no doubt absorb revenue up to the limit.

Legislators will be pushing hard in the few weeks ahead to enact their tax cap version, designed to provide such flexibility. The hope for them is to have voters convinced passage of Question 3, with its straight limit provision, will not be necessary because a law is already on the books. At this point, arguments put forth by high tech and CLT are more persuasive. In any event, chances that the voters will not take advantage of any opportunity to hold down spending by public officials are slim. Like Proposition 2 1/2, an affirmative response undoubtedly will be forthcoming.

U.S. revenue sharing had its origination in the Nixon administration to provide city-town relief. Many wasteful, pie-in-the-sky programs of the Johnson years were being wiped out. The Great Society programs offered by President Johnson were being dismantled. Tax money sent to Washington was to be returned in cash grants, with freedom of choice to select areas of need. Police and fire budgets were shored up, among other things. Block grants continued to address special city-town needs, a formula that has worked very well.

Those federal dollars are urgently needed for deficit trimming, a monumental task that consistently falls short of expectations because Reagan keeps national defense uppermost in his White House policy book.

Of particular note is the fact that the President and House Speaker O'Neill are both in agreement on the revenue sharing wipeout, a rare alliance on the financial side which will have significant influence on members of both branches.

Grumbling will come from municipalities, Boston already having expressed dismay at the loss of some $118 million. Getting back to basics in terms of budget responsibility at home sounds good to us.

Federal drug bill becoming a legislative dumping ground

By Robert J. Wagman

As senators and representatives frenziedly jump on the anti-drug bandwagon in an attempt to pass a drug bill before adjournment, the bill has become a dumping ground for old legislation that, in some cases, has been bottled up in Congress for years.

Among the many provisions that could be added to a drug bill are a weakening of rules concerning evidence at criminal trials and the institution of the death penalty for some drug-related offenses.

The House Democratic leadership had hoped to take a "clean" drug bill to the floor and pass it quickly with few amendments. But so many members demanded to offer amendments that, in the end, the leadership allowed most of the amendments to be debated and voted upon.

Then, in the almost circuslike atmosphere that prevailed, conservatives were able to win approval of a weakening of the Fourth Amendment "exclusionary rule."

Seventy-two years ago the Supreme Court formulated the exclusionary rule. It prohibited evidence obtained in an illegal search or seizure from being introduced in a trial. For years prosecutors and law-enforcement officials have fought for a less strict interpretation of the rule. In 1984 the Supreme Court modified it to allow evidence obtained with a court-issued warrant even if that warrant later proved faulty, as long as the court had not been deliberately misled in issuing the warrant.

Law-enforcement officials wanted more. In 1984 the Senate passed a "good faith" exception to the rule that allows evidence if law-enforcement officers honestly believed they were operating in compliance with the Fourth Amendment. But civil libertarians objected, and the measure never got out of the House Judiciary Committee, where it was opposed by chairman Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J.

Then, suddenly, this "good faith" exception was offered by conservative Rep. Daniel E. Lungren, R-Calif., as an amendment to the drug bill. Before opponents could muster a fight it was accepted by a 259-153 margin — after less than 15 minutes of debate. Although a part of the drug bill, the amendment would not be limited to drug cases.

> 'I fear this bill is the legislative equivalent of crack. It yields a short-term high, but does long-term damage to the system, and it's expensive to boot.'
> Rep. Barney Frank

This so angered some House liberals that they voted against the whole bill. Reportedly Rodino was furious with the leadership for allowing the amendment to be offered. He argued privately that the amendment had been rejected several times by the Judiciary Committee and should not have been allowed on the floor by a backdoor approach.

After the vote Rodino spoke to reporters: "We are here to fight a war against drugs. Now it seems to me we are attacking the Constitution of the United States."

In the amending process on the House floor, a death penalty was added to the drug bill for drug-related killings that fall under the "continued criminal activity" section of federal criminal law — a section essentially dealing with organized crime.

Senate Republicans, led by Sen. Strom Thurmond, have tried unsuccessfully for years to establish a federal death penalty for crimes ranging from attempts to kill the president to espionage to terrorist killings of U.S. citizens outside the United States. They have thrown the measure into the drug bill, adding drug-related crimes almost as an afterthought to the list of offenses punishable by death.

Other old legislation also being made part of the Senate drug bill includes:

— The establishment of a national driver's-license system for bus and truck drivers, many of whom now hold multiple state licenses to evade penalities for repeated offenses;

— Relaxation of federal habeas corpus rules to allow federal courts to dismiss petitions that have already been heard in a state court;

— A relaxation of the federal Freedom of Information Act that would make it more difficult to gain access to information;

— Increased arrest authority for Immigration and Naturalization Services agents.

Backers of these various measures hope they will be approved in the rush to get a drug bill approved before the scheduled October adjournment.

More than a few in Congress are decrying the attempts by Democrats and Republicans alike to top one another in approving new programs and appropriating money to fight drugs.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, on the rush to pass legislation and initiate wide-ranging drug-testing programs: "There is no quick fix to the drug problem. Solving it will take more than reconnaissance planes, jail cells and glass jars."

Irked by fate of furry friends

To the editor:

I've never had a love affair with our furry little neighbors, but lately I'm dismayed at the sight of squirrels' lifeless bodies strewn around the neighborhood streets.

Literally speaking, are they turning "nutty" and charging out onto the roadways to challenge motorists? Are their reflexes slowing up and for what reason?

The other day, I counted about twenty-five - some belly-up - others flattened out into sickening silhouettes. To add to the catastrophe, there was a skunk's tail in the midst of this mess. I wondered what happened to the rest of the skunkperson and if he or she lived to walk away and did it score first. Therein lies a tale!

All joking aside - Massachusetts' gains in residents are definitely the squirrels' loss! Frankly, I worry more about why and how they died. Could it be because of irresponsible driving habits? (I always brake for them as I would for a dog or a cat.)

Old friends

To the editor:

As Nancy Criscitiello could have told you, the Friends of the Newton Free Library is a much older organization than the ten years you indicated in a Newswatch article in the September 24 Graphic.

I became a member of the already-existing group in 1965 and served as its president from 1968 to 1970. One of the Friends' concerns in those days, over 20 years ago, was the needed replacement of the aging Main Library building which now at last is coming to pass.

Repair bid withdrawn

Galego's bid remained a mystery until Monday afternoon when Kanbar received Lowrie's letter.

"Of course it disappoints us," Kanbar said of the company's withdrawal. "We had a project that came in substantially under estimate."

The Law Department is now deciding whether the city should keep Galego's bond surety, roughly $20,000. The 5-percent surety demonstrates a bidder's intentions to complete a project as specified.

Curby leaves amidst praise

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann had high praise for Judith Curby's skill in managing the city's new sewer/water rate system, but he may feel her loss more come next softball season.

Curby, who was instrumental in untangling a web of problems surrounding the installation of new water meters and the computerization of sewer/water records, is leaving the city's employe.

"Judy's played a large role," the mayor said. "She's done a terrific job for the city."

The city hired Curby in 1979 to serve as the budget analyst for Comptroller Lawrence Marino's office. She became business manager for the city's sewer/water division in 1983.

On Oct. 6, the 31-year-old Curby will become the assistant director of financial services for the Town of Wellesley. "I've enjoyed my time with the city, especially the Water Department," Curby said.

The Cambridge resident holds a bachelors degree in political Science from Mount Holyoke College and is studying for a masters in business administration at Boston College.

"I have an opportunity to work in the financia' end of municipal government," Curby said. "It's pretty much an opportunity for broader experience."

Mann said he will also miss Curby for her baseball prowess. Last month, she helped lead a team of city officials to an 8 to 7 victory over a collection of BC administrators, professors and alleged ringers.

But Curby's leaving has a double jeopardy should the city face the Eagles on the softball team next year. "Since I'm at Boston College," she said, "I'll have to play on BC's side."

Tax bills lack info

Required by law every three years, the revaluation adjusts property assessments to reflect their current market values. Since the average worth of homes skyrocketed in 1984 and 1985, home values are expected to increase considerably.

Palmer consistently has cautioned residents that those hikes will be offset at least partially by a corresponding drop in the tax rate.

This means that if a home's value were to rise at the same rate as the citywide average, the owner's property tax bill would theoretically increase only by the small annual percentage allowed by Proposition 2½.

Residents will have to wait for the second billing to determine if their annual tax bill will be higher.

"Any increased taxes — whether for budgetary reasons or equity reasons — are all paid on the second bill," Palmer said.

This fall's estimated tax bill shows only the amount a homeowner has to pay. The spring or actual tax bill will list a home's previous value, its proposed new value, and a proposed 1987 tax bill.

Palmer said he expects the spring bill to be mailed in February or March. It will be due on May 1. Residents will be able to raise questions about their new assessments during the late winter and early spring, Palmer said.

The second billing also will include a certificate noting any fiscal 1987 tax exemptions or abatements and will deduct them from the spring bill, he said.

A homeowner can receive a tax exemption for a variety of reasons, including some war-related disabilities and old age.

Some residents are confused because the first or estimated bill does not contain such a certificate. "They're used to having a tax bill and an abatement certificate," Palmer said. "This estimated bill includes the fact they received an exemption and/or abatement last year."

There is one small piece of good news accompanying this fall's estimated bills. Since Nov. 1 — normally the last day for paying the autumn bill — falls on a Saturday, homeowners will not have to deliver their share of the city's operating expenses until two days later.

Unique approach to drug problems purpose of the workshops was to teach employees how one person's behavior affects everyone else's.

Boccabella also worked with Newton Mayor Theodore Mann to add a drug information session onto the city's annual alcohol seminar on Nov. 18. The Abruzzi employee assistance plan was presented as a model to the U.S. Conference of Mayors during the mayor's recent trip to Washington. Within his own company, Boccabella's idea is to "re-establish attitudes toward oneself and other people," he said. "Drugs and alcohol are the most selfish things a person can do. In that condition, they can't help anyone and they are making themselves unavailable."

During Saturday's 1-½ hour workshop, the employees were divided into four groups — bartender, restaurant owner, friends of the liquor thieves, and the liquor thieves — each charged with determining how best to handle the situation.

The workshop involves "a rethinking process of what a problem is," according to Matt Green. Most people are trained to help each other with their problems, he explains. But sometimes, helping them merely adds problems to one's own life while giving friends leeway to continue their aberrant ways, he says.

"I had a friend with a drug problem," says one employee during the workshop. "She wouldn't listen. She went right ahead, and I drove her home."

"Your friend has no problem when you drive her home," says Joan. "I worked with a man for 15 years on his alcohol problem. It was my problem until I stopped doing it. Then it was his problem."

In the same way, management has a problem when employers, like Boccabella, allow employees to be tardy for work everyday.

"Human beings are very adaptable, so it's easy to ignore it," said Boccabella.

But Boccabella, whose employees are high school and college students or recent immigrants, can not afford to ignore lax behavior, which may result from drug or alcohol use.

And he wants to avoid tragic, drug-related accidents. "Len Bias was a perfect specimen of a human being," says Boccabella. "His motivation was there and he was physically there. Then, one mistake, and he's gone."

"If we can get people to feel good about themselves, that's the beginning," he said. "Then we reward them for good work."

Bigelow's fate in mayor's hands

dle school system, which would require another middle school. However, the school department will not make a final decision on reorganization until February, reuse committee members said.

"The issue is the position we've been put in. It's a bad situation with everything being put on hold," Aldermen George Mansfield said after the committee heatedly discussed the role of the school committee's indecision.

Committee Chairman Sondra Shick said she favored getting the planning department, library trustees and school committee to sit down and make a decision.

After an hour and a half of discussion, the committee decided to recommend interim occupancy for community groups, saying the city would have to help pay for the school's annual operating cost of $140,000.

Much of the discussion focused on the Newton Free Library's proposal to move the Junior Library from Newton Corner to Bigelow. Library Trustee Dorothy Reichard said termites and inadequate shelf space are a few of the problems at the aging library and "the only problem with moving the boys and girls library to Bigelow is the cost," which she said the trustees could not afford.

Barry Canner, director of the planning department, said the move would cost roughly $36,000.

Coletti said he disagreed with the library trustees' desire to move from the Newton Corner site because of deteriorating conditions there. He said they should apply for improvement aid from Newton's capital appropriations budget rather than leave the city with additional surplus property.

"We should come up with some arrangement to keep it alive for the city rather than lose millions of dollars down the road," Coletti said.

Other options discussed include combining the existing school library at Bigelow with the youth library and leasing the school to the youth library in conjunction with the Newton Community Service Center Inc., the health department and a rehabilitation group.

Shick said she would talk to the city's law department to be sure the reuse committee could "reserve custody of Bigelow for two years," while giving the mayor the chance to "calculate the cost of interim use versus mothballing them for surplus."

You shouldn't buy contacts the way you buy eyeglasses.

Because contact lenses interact directly with your eyes, buying them requires more attention and care than buying eyeglasses. An improper prescription, fitting or lens type could cause problems – even for a veteran wearer.

The solution is an expert fitting by an eye doctor and professional follow-up care. Fitting by a Cambridge Eye Associates eye doctor includes a no-obligation in-office trial, instructions and a 15 day refund privilege. It costs just $25 to $40 depending on your type of lens. Our optional Vision Care Plus Program features unlimited follow-up visits with our eye doctor for about the price of a single visit with an individual eye doctor.

So deciding where to buy your contacts is as important as deciding to buy them in the first place. And the first place to buy contact lenses is Cambridge Eye Associates, New England's largest family of eye doctors.

Board toughens up 10 percent rules

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Aldermen last week made it harder for developers to build off-site units to fulfill the requirements of the city's 10 Percent ordinance.

Developers of 10 or more units must contribute at least one unit to the city's affordable housing pool. Legislation and Rules (L&R) Committee members moved to ensure that those units are built on the site of the development.

A few weeks ago, the Programs and Planning Committee voted to make developers offering off-site units contribute 20 percent of the total number of units to the housing pool instead of the 10 percent required for on-site contributions.

L&R members voted to keep those units in the same "neighborhood statistics program," a geographic area determined by the state Census Bureau similar to the city's village configuration.

Some members of the committee were concerned that the off-site proposal would be too stringent and a de facto elimination of off-site contributions, but Alderman Louis Irwin pointed out there are situations where a developer could buy a two-family home in the same neighborhood for a contribution to the housing pool.

The committee held the revision of the housing ordinance pending a Law Department review of when the ordinance should be applied.

The proposed ordinance states that developers seeking special permits must contribute to the housing pool but Alderman Joshua Davidson said there are exceptions that must be considered.

Davidson, architect of a formula sub-10 unit developers would follow to make cash contributions, said the Law Department will rewrite the proposed ordinance to limit who is required to make contributions.

"If a developer wants to build a three-unit subdivision, but is willing to put the three units on one side of the lot to create open space, we don't want that developer to have to contribute to the 10 Percent ordinance because the open space serves the public good," he said.

He added that the revision will also eliminate those seeking special permits for parking and other non-housing related items.

The Law Department decision, he said, should be available when the committee meets next month in a special session to finalize the legal wording.

If approved at that meeting, the revised 10 Percent ordinance will face a Board of Aldermen vote.

Mixed use proposal denied

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A plan to build 48 units of housing and 8,000 sq. ft. of subsidized commercial space on the Newton-Watertown border fell one vote short of approval by the Land Use Committee last week.

The denial vote came over the objections of Alderman Ronald Marini, who represents the Newton Corner neighborhood where the building was proposed. Marini, an opponent of large-scale development in that neighborhood said the plan, while far from perfect, was probably the best compromise for the area.

Martin Tan, a consultant to Texas developer George Fahey, said it is likely the 264 Centre St. building will be sold to commercial office developers if the plan is not approved by the Board of Aldermen. Office development is something Marini has been opposing on behalf of the neighborhood.

After consulting with neighbors and Fahey representatives, Marini said he won a considerable reduction in the scope of the project, which originally called for 67 units, 15,000 sq. ft. of commercial space in a 45-ft. building.

"We don't want to see another Druker in this neighborhood," Marini said of One Center Place, a massive office building developed by Ronald Drucker ...st up Centre Street from the ...y proposal. "We don't want people who come in here at 9 a.m. and leave at 5 p.m. We want people who will care about the neighborhood."

Marini said the proposal will benefit Newton Corner because the 20 housing units slated for the Newton side of the building will be "relatively affordable."

Tan said the nine one-bedroom units would sell for $157,000 and the 11 two-bedroom units would sell at $206,000. In addition, Fahey's architect Glenn Morris said the commercial space would be sold at $7-$9 less per square foot.

Tan said Grocery Garrison, a company he has part interest in, has already committed to the building.

Alderman Bruce Carmichael, who also represents the area, opposed the project because he said it would drastically alter the neighborhood.

"This would add to the traffic, density and parking problems that already exist in Newton Corner and it would further add to the decay of the neighborhood."

He added that potential tenants for the building would not be likely to contribute to the neighborhood atmosphere of the area.

Marini countered that by saying the proposal was the best the neighborhood could hope for.

"The housing is relatively affordable, and the petitioner has offered two two-bedroom units in compliance with the 10 Percent ordinance. That, combined with neighborhood-type stores that will allow residents to have a place to shop in the area make this an acceptable proposal."

The proposal is not dead. It will face a board vote Oct. 6. Harrington admitted passage will be difficult.

Although the committee was deadlocked, with McGrath and Carmichael opposed, Creem and Jefferson in favor and Basham abstaining, the decision is listed as a denial.

Mason-Rice grads

Students can pick school

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Junior high school students living in the Mason-Rice district will have the option of attending classes at either the Day or Brown schools next year.

Caving in to parental pressure, the School Committee last week voted to create a "semi-optional" district encompassing the area north of Beacon Street.

The committee refused to make the district optional at the high school level. Students living north of Beacon Street still will attend Newton North High School and those south of Beacon Street will attend Newton South High School.

The Mason-Rice Parent-Teacher Organization (PTO) hoped the junior high school chosen by a student would also determine the high school they would attend. But School Committee members were unwilling to go that far.

With the new semi-optional district, students may choose to attend Brown Junior High School on the south side of the city, but still would attend Newton North High School.

"We're happy with what we got, but we were hoping to get more," said Pamela Scantalides, president of the Mason-Rice PTO. "We knew the School Committee wouldn't give it to us, but it was worth a try."

The Mason-Rice district straddles Beacon Street, with approximately 60 percent of the students living on the north side and 40 percent on the south side.

Since 1979, the Mason-Rice district pattern has changed four times, which the PTO protested as "unfair and disruptive."

The most recent change was in 1985 when Bigelow Junior High School was closed and the entire Mason-Rice area redistricted to Brown Junior High School. This change was intended to avoid potential overcrowding at Day Junior High School, according to Vincent Silluzio, assistant superintendent of operations and planning.

Silluzio strongly opposed making the Mason-Rice district optional. If most students living north of Beacon Street chose Day Junior High School "current projections indicate that Day's enrollment would exceed its capacity by mid-1990s."

Brown's enrollment would be only at 75 percent capacity by mid-1990s, he said.

But Scantalides said she found it "hard to believe" that 40 sixth-graders "could possibly disrupt" the school balance, as predicted by Silluzio. She said Silluzio was describing a "worst case" scenario, assuming all students north of Beacon Street would choose Day Junior High School over Brown. She said the student distribution in the district between Brown and Day would be about even.

"The families living north of Beacon Street feel they are being made to bear the burden of balancing the junior high population for the entire city," she said. "There is nothing to prevent the School Committee from amending any optional policy if it results in the overcrowding of Day at some point in the future."

Silluzio said making the district semi-optional is unnecessary. The schools always have tried, through a "liberal" out-of-district procedure, to accomodate families who prefer their children attend Day, he said. During the last two years all 23 Mason-Rice out-of-district requests for Day were granted, according to Silluzio.

A head of the class

Sculptor Gloria Waller adds the finishing touches to her bust of Mayor Theodore Mann. Her work was chosen as the best in a Newton Arts Center class that studied the mayor for several sittings, with each member creating a bust. The center is celebrating its tenth anniversary with a faculty exhibition, which continues through October 5, children's art activities and the special sculpture exhibit. Mann's bust will be donated to the City of Newton.

SAT scores down ten points

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores for the senior classes of 1986 went down almost 10 points over last year's scores in both Newton and Waltham. But Newton seniors scored 81 points above the national average while Waltham seniors scored 46 points below.

Officials in both school departments said this year's lower scores are not statistically significant and do not reflect a decrease in the quality of education since last year.

"To truly analyze the meaning of the scores and how they reflect on a school, population comparisons also have to be made and every student would have to take the exact same test, which is not the case," Waltham Assistant Superintendent Emile Rosenberg said.

"In Waltham we also encourage a large number of seniors to take the test even if they are not interested in going to college. This can also affect the score distribution," Emile said.

About 55 percent of Waltham's 1986 seniors took the exam, while 80 percent took the test in Newton. Nationally, 66 percent of the senior class took the SATs.

The College Board reported this week that this year's high school seniors' combined average score on the two-part exam was 906 — 475 on the math section and 431 on the verbal. The national average score is reported to be exactly the same as last year. Seniors' average test score in the state is three points above the national average.

In Newton, the combined average score was 987 — 522 in the math section and 465 in verbal. Waltham's combined average score was 860 — 452 in mathmatics and 408 in the verbal section. Watertown school officials were unable to supply the data.

To the School Department's best knowledge, Newton has always scored above the national average since the test was first administered 60 years ago, said Vincent Silluzio, assistant superintendent of operations and planning. The gap between the national average score and Newton test scores has continually widened since 1972.

Newton was only 13 points above the national average SAT score in 1972. In 1986 the gap widened to an 81 point spead.

According to The College Board, "Broad generalizations made on the basis of SAT scores alone have limited value." The board also reports that other factors such as academic courses studied in high school, family background, sex, and education of parents can strongly affect a student's test performance.

SAT scores are intended to primarily help predict a student's academic performance in college and to assess the academic needs of individual students, according to the board.

Colleges seem to be placing less emphisis on SAT scores than they have in the past, according to Rosenberg and Newton South High School Guidance Counselor Margaret Addis. Years ago colleges and universities set a minimum SAT score standard that students had to meet before their applications were seriously considered.

"Colleges don't talk in those terms anymore, mostly because they can't afford to," Addis said. "There are fewer and fewer college-bound students this decade because of the population changes. Colleges need to consider as many applicants as they can get to fill their freshman classes."

State colleges, with considerably lower tuitions than private schools, are flooded with applications because of economics, according to Rosenberg. Private colleges, as a result, can not afford to be as selective as they used to be, he added.

"Statistics like SAT scores can be used and abused," Rosenberg said. "Basically, SATs measure how well youngsters take multiple choice tests under time pressure. They don't test creativity, motivation or a student's studying skills."

A student's school records, high school grades, extra curricular activities and recommendations are equally if not more important to college admission boards, Rosenberg and Addis said.

Basement apartment robbed Sunday

NEWTON — A Quasar 13-inch color television and a number of pieces of jewelry were stolen out of a basement apartment on Wesley Street Saturday afternoon while the resident was at church. Police said a neighbor saw a teenager emerge from the apartment carrying a trash bag.

He was joined by two other teen-agers and all three rode off on bicycles. The woman did not call police. Instead she followed the three teens in her car. She followed them up Tremont Street toward Boston, but lost them when they reached the Oak Square area.

VCR and jewelry stolen on Saturday

NEWTON — A Sharp video cassette recorder and assorted pieces of jewelry were stolen out of a Walnut Hill Road home Saturday night. Police said the thief broke in through a bathroom window. The theft occurred between 6 and 11 p.m.

Gunpoint robbery in mall parking lot

NEWTON — A woman was held up at gunpoint Friday morning in the Chestnut Hill Mall parking lot, said police. The woman told police she had just parked her car around 11:15 a.m. when two men, one of them with a gun, approached her. They took her pocketbook, necklace, gold earrings, wedding band and a diamond ring, then fled toward Hammond Pond Parkway, said police.

Cars in Newton North lot broken into

NEWTONVILLE — Two cars parked at Newton North High School were broken into last Wednesday, police said. An AM-FM Pioneer stereo cassette deck was reportedly stolen from a 1969 Pontiac GTO in the afternoon. Wednesday evening a Clarion AM-FM radio was reported stolen from a 1986 Saab. Entrance was gained by breaking the driver's side window, police said.

Watertown man pleads not guilty

NEWTON — Sang Bin Lee, 23, of Watertown, pleaded not guilty in District Court yesterday to charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon — a car bumper jack — and malicious destruction of property over $100. The defendant was released on personal recognizance. The case was continued to Oct. 2.

Lee allegedly assaulted a Newton Highlands resident outside his Wilson Circle home Sept. 5. Witnesses said Lee got out of his car and began beating the victim for no apparent reason, police said. The witnesses, friends of the he victim, were able to get the jack away from Lee who in turn hopped on the victim's car and kicked in the windshield, police said.

Lee fled the scene of the fight before police arrived. Witnesses knew Lee by name and told police where he worked, police said.

Liquor among items stolen from home

NEWTON — Assorted jewelry and liquor was stolen out of a Sheridan Street home Saturday, according to police. The thief forced open a cellar door and stole the items after turning on a garden hose and flooding the basement.

Tax changes for real estate investors

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Following stocks and mutual funds, real estate has become the favorite investment of individuals who want to build wealth.

One of the most popular forms of real estate investing has been the private and public limited partnership which, in addition to offering income and the potential for capital appreciation, also gave the investing partner a variety of tax write-offs.

Excessive write-offs from these limited partnerships have come under attack by Congress in the new tax bill just fashioned by a joint Senate-House Conference Committee.

Potential real estate investors should carefully consider three time periods during which the tax reform bill will have differing impacts on investors. These are the periods between now and the official date of enactment of the tax bill; the period from enactment to the end of the years; and the period from Jan. 1, 1987 on.

Until the enactment date, all the present rules apply. The most notable example is the current 19-year ACRS (accelerated cost recovery system) depreciation schedule. The proposed law mandates 27½ years on residential real estate and 30½ years for non-residential. Other favorable provisions are also lost under the draft legislation.

If you have been on the fence regarding the purchase of a real estate investment via a limited partnership, or buying rather than renting your office space, you should consider strongly the advantages you will receive under the present tax code.

The fundemental reasons for investing in real estate still remain: appreciation potential, income, leverage (if financed), and equity ownership in an investment which generally increases in value. Merely because the depreciation write-off will not be as great as before should be no deterrent to real estate investing. In fact, it may offer an attractive opportunity for those willing to move while the market is soft — while others sit back waiting to see what will happen.

The impact on past and present real estate investments of so-called "phase-in" rules in the proposed tax code, which have cause considerable consternation in the investment real estate industry, will be discussed in next week's column.

Brockton takes out frustrations on Tigers

By David Cuddy
Staff Writer

NEWTON — If Armond Colombo and his Brockton Boxers needed something bigger than life to make them forget about the recent past, they found it at Dickinson Stadium on Saturday.

Powered by 205-pound sophomore Rudy Harris, who rushed for an incredible 232 yards and scored four touchdowns, the Boxers leveled host Newton North, 49-0, to lessen the pains of a season-opening loss three weeks ago.

"Anyone whose ever been in a car crash knows what we've been through," said Newton North coach Peter Capodilupo after the loss. "Brockton is a great team, and unfortunately, we were the next team in the way."

The first team in Brockton's way was St. John the Baptist, but the New Yorkers shocked the Boxers with an 8-0 victory, snapping a 23-game Brockton win streak. Saturday, the Boxers wanted a win in the worst way, and the bad-boys of high school football accepted the role of the most-hated bully on the block.

'Anyone whose ever been in a car crash knows what we've been through. Brockton is a great team and, unfortanately, we were the next team in the way.'

Tiger coach Peter Capodilupo

The Boxers beat up and bloodied Newton North at will, and Colombo didn't call off his dogs until the Tigers were deader than dead. A 49-0 beating may be considered a little harsh, but Colombo insisted he was not trying to run up the score.

"We've had one game in five and a half weeks," Colombo explained. "We had planned on keeping the kids in as long as we could regardless. It's always been my opinion that it doesn't hurt anymore when you lose by a big score. Personally, I think it hurts more if you lose 8-0."

"He has a different philosophy than most people," said Capodilupo, disagreeing with Colombo's tactics. "Once you win a game, you win the game."

Newton North never stood a chance against a Brockton offensive front line that was blowing open holes with mine-like efficiency, allowing Harris and fellow sophomore Darnell Campbell an all-day permit to run up and down the gridiron.

The pair of 10th graders were unstoppable, rushing for 319 of Brockton's total 355 ground yards. The duo combined for all seven of Brockton's touchdowns, spreading them out evenly for three quarters before finally backing off midway through the fourth.

"They both did an excellent job," Colombo said of his sophomore connection. "They have changed the complete complexion of the team. Before, we lived and died by the pass. It's going to be just the opposite this year."

On the other side of the ball, Brockton was just as tough. From the outset, the Tigers were being pushed back instead of moving forward.

Granted, Newton North was without the services of its ace halfback, Mark Adams, who missed the game with ligament problems in his knee but could possible be ready for Friday's North Quincy contest. But even the 1,000-yard rusher was not going to make up 49 points on his own.

North managed just two first downs and 36 total yards in the first half — never penetrating deeper than its own 45 yard line. It wasn't until the third quarter that the Tigers drove the ball past midfield and into Boxer territory. But by then, North trailed, 35-0.

The afternoon had started on an up note when Tiger quarterback Milton Britton hit wide receiver Dennis Rohanna for an 18-yard gain on the first play from scrimmage, but the ride was all downhill from there.

Britton was tossed back seven yards on the next play and North never made it back to the scrimmage line before being forced to punt away.

As soon as the Brockton offense took the field — the intimidating but overrated Tommy Colombo at the helm, flanked by his two college-type running backs — it was all over.

Following a Colombo overthrow on first down, Harris took a pitch from his quarterback and followed a wall of blockers 56 yards to the Tiger five-yard line.

One play later, the 6-3, 195-pound Campbell was bursting through a hole in the middle for his first of three TDs on the day.

Early on, Campbell looked to be the back-of-the-day. He topped his five-yard power drive up the middle with another bulldozer run for Brockton's second touchdown and a 14-0 lead.

On second and nine from the Newton North 30, Campbell plowed through a gap in the lines and shifted towards the right sideline where he raced the rest of the way to the endzone.

Harris got the call next. Brockton was in the process of driving for its third touchdown when the first quarter ended, leaving the Boxers just five yards from paydirt.

The Tigers took the few minutes between quarters to regroup, and Newton North actually stopped the 6-2, 205-pound Harris twice before the Boxer halfback bulled his way in from three-yards out to break any spirit Newton North had left.

Campbell scored from in close for a 28-0 lead at the half, but the fireworks were far from over as Brockton turned on the heat in the third quarter.

Harris rushed for 157-yards and two touchdowns in the third quarter alone. The scary part is that he did it on three carries. The sophomore set up his own 15-yard touchdown with a 47-yard sprint and muscled his way through a hole late in the quarter for a 95-yard TD run.

"His potential is the greatest I've ever seen," Colombo said of Harris. "He's got size, speed, and he's an athlete. My biggest problem with him is getting him to put on the moves instead of running people over."

Lancers volleyballers halted by St. Patrick's

WATERTOWN — Coleen Barrett served out two crucial points to sew up a three game St. Patrick's volleyball victory Thursday against Newton Catholic in a battle of the unbeatens.

With the victory, St. Pat's remains undefeated at 4-0 while Newton Catholic drops to 4-1. St. Patrick's Knights will will play at North Cambridge Catholic today at 3:30 p.m. while Newton Catholic Lancers will play at Sacred Heart of Weymouth on Tuesday starting at 3:30 p.m.

Barrett's two points clinched a 19-17 victory in game three to lock up the two games to one victory.

With the games tied at 1-1, St. Pat's Lynn Campbell started a six point serving streak lifting her team to a 11-7 lead. Barrett served to a 13-10 score before giving the ball up. Newton Catholic's Linda Levy served up to 14 and then lost the serve to St. Pat's. The Knight's received excellant net play from junior Maryellen Kelly and superb setting from junior Laura Caso during the game.

St. Pat's served to match point at 15, then lost the serve. Newton Catholic tied, then lost the serve, later they picked up another point for a match point at 17-16.

St Pat's then dismayed their foes by picking one point to tie, after exchanges' serves Barrett came to the line. She picked up her first point and then bump, set, spike and MATCH!!

The first game saw Lancers jump to a 8-2 lead and never looked back taking the game 15-5.

The second game saw the Knights take what would be the first of two close emotional games. Newton took another early 13-8 lead and St. Pat's stopped them cold. Seniors Kelly Morely, Campbell and Barrett rallyed the team with their spiking, setting and services. The Knights held at 14-14 and Campbell served to match point and junior Maryellen Kelly tallied the game point.

St Pat's received a bit of bad news in the victory, senior Antonella Lanni will be lost from three to four weeks because of an ankle injury.

Lancers top Mission

Newton Catholic defeated third-place Mission High School, 15-9 and 15-4, to take a two-game sweep Tuesday in girls' volleyball action.

The wins were due to team work from the Lancers. Angela Canty and Karen Palmer each had five straight points while serving and setters Linda Leary and Canty also assisted in the victory,

"Qverall it was a strong team performance. We did a real good job because we showed a lot of team work.", said Newton Catholic's coach Rose Bertucci. "In the second game Mission just seemed to give up."

The Lancers got a mild workout at the expense of North Cambridge Catholic last week, winning both games, 15-4, to gain the sweep.

Satter paces North girls to No. 7

NEWTON — Amy Satter scored one goal and assisted on another as Newton North defeated second-place Brookline, 2-0, Friday to remain both unbeaten and unscored upon in seven games.

Satter passed the ball up to Heather Hughes who slammed a shot from 18 yards out, easily slipping it by the Brookline netminder.

Six minutes into the second half Amy Drew lofted the ball over the Brookline defense to Satter on the left wing. Satter kicked the ball in from 10 yards out hitting the far corner.

Goalie Gretchen Young posted the shutout for the Tigers. Her netminding partner, Marie Farrar, separated her shoulder and will be lost for several weeks.

Blank Brockton

Newton North rudely handed the Brockton a late afternoon snack in the Tigers 4-0 victory, but the problem was — as hosts — the Boxers probably thought it very rude to be handed their lunch so easily Wednesday at Brockton.

Tiger captain Kendra Daly continued to scorch opposing goalies by slamming home a goal 17 minutes into the contest. Daly booted in the first North goal on a corner kick that went in untouched.

Three minutes later Salter kicked a cross shot to Caterina Victoria who sliced the ball into the net to easily up the score.

Salter again found herself assisting on another goal, passing the ball up to Joan Schultz. Schultz rattled the nerves on the Brockton sidelines by dropping the Boxers again.

Marilyn Hughes stretched the vertebra of the Brockton goalie by sailing a shot over her head for the final goal. Schultz stung an indirect kick to Hughes and she lofted a nice high arc into the net.

Close call

A struggling Newton North girls' soccer squad was shut out for 40 minutes Monday but lived to tell about it, pulling out a 2-0 victory over a pesky North Quincy team at home.

It was 30 minutes into the second half before Newton North dented the North Quincy net. Daly curved a corner kick towards the Red Raider net and the ball bounced out of the netminder's hands and rolled into the net.

The flood gates looked wide open when Newton North scored two minutes later, but the Tigers would leave the margain of victory at two — intent with the victory.

Two minutes later, Becky Howland chipped a shot from her own end that cleared a host of North Quincy attackers and found Satter at midfield.

Satter shook off a lone Raider defender, picked the ball up, and faked right before going left with an arching shot for the insurance marker.

North golfers still unbeaten

NEWTON — Unbeaten Newton North defeated North Quincy, 7-2, Monday at Brae Burn Country Club. The Tigers' No. 1 man, Brian Clancy, lost his first match of the season, but his teammates were able to pull out the victory.

Although Clancy shot a 34 he lost by four holes to Derek Holt of North Quincy. Andy Campbell won his match by four holes, while together they dropped the best ball to North Quincy.

The second team swept its opponents with second man Marty Burke and fifth man Joe Deribes both scoring points. They teamed together to grab the best ball. Neil Ronchinsky and Jim Rizza swept three points in the third match.

Newton North bested Waltham, 6 1/2 to 5 1/2, recently at Brae Burn. boys' golf recently at Braeburn Country Club, in Newton. The Tigers now have a 4-0 record.

The key to the victory of the Tigers was the winning of the best ball by each of the three teams. Clancy stroked a 36 to win the low man honors, with Deribes closely trailing at 37.

Burke and Clancy dominated play against Brookline, soundly defeating the Wealthy Towners, 8 1/2 to 1/2.

Unicorns sting listless Lions

By Ted Rooney
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — For the second week in a row the Newton South Lions were unable to score as they succumbed to an excellent Keefe Tech running game, 24-0, Saturday at George Winkler Field.

The Lions lacked the necessary intensity to defeat the enthused Unicorns, who seemed to be spurred on by last year's 22-0 defeat at the hands of South.

"We didn't come to play football," South coach Art Kojoyian said. "We didn't block, we didn't tackle and we didn't execute and you certainly can't win when that happens."

The Lions' offense was especially feeble, with only two legitimate drives the entire game — one in the first quarter and one in the second quarter. The second quarter drive took South to the Keefe Tech 11, but the Lions were unable to get past the eight, where Tech would take over.

"Our defense hadn't been seriously tested this year," said Keefe Tech coach John Blair, whose team has yet to be scored upon. "I was worried what would happen if we got down. But the defense began to assert themselves and the offense took over from there."

The Lions received the opening kickoff but were unable to go anywhere, stalling on their own 25. Tech returned the ensuing punt to the Lion 47, where running back Doug Landry, who would be a thorn in the side of the Lions all day, broke up the sideline for a 24-yard run to South's 23.

Landry is overshadowed by fellow running back Bryan Munroe, who has rushed for 2,000 yards during his career at Keefe Tech, but he was the spark to the Unicorns' offense against the Lions, eventully finishing with 133 yards rushing.

"Doug brings life to us," Blair said. "He's a tough customer. Bryan's a great running back, but Doug's our spark."

After Landry's run Gary Cote rushed for three yards to the 20, and Munroe ran it five sraight times — the last carry for a touchdown with 4:58 remaining in the quarter. Munroe added the extra point for a 7-0 Keefe lead.

After the kickoff South managed to construct one of it only drives of the game, as running backs Darryl Moran, Leroy Browne, and Sean Brady carried South from its 18 to midfield.

The drive stalled there, though, as a holding call pushed the Lions back 10 yards, and South quarterback Ben Burlingame threw two incomplete passes, both of which were dropped. Burlingame suffered through another poor week, completing only four of 11 passes, with two interceptions.

The Unicorn series after the South punt went nowhere and they were forced to punt, which they downed at the South 17-yard line.

Browne carried for seven to the 24 and Moran was stopped for no gain. On third down and three, Burlingame ran the option to the left, flipping the ball to Browne as he was tackled. Browne took it up the sideline for 33 yards before he was finally pushed out of bounds at the Keefe Tech 43-yard line.

Moran and Browne alternated rushes for the next four carries, taking the ball down to the 16-yard line. South was seemingly ready to score for the first time this season, but four rushes fell a yard short of the first down and Keefe Tech took over at its own seven.

South got some unexpected good luck, though, when Cote fumbled the ball at the 20-yard line with three minutes remaining in the half. Once again, though, South was thwarted in its quest to score. Two rushes and two Burlingame completes gained a total of eight yards.

Keefe's final drive of the half brought them to the Lions' 47-yard line with three seconds remaining. On the final play John Morgan intercepted Tech quarterback Jason Magri's bomb at the five-yard line to end the threat and the half.

Landry struck again after the second-half kickoff, which Keefe Tech returned to its 32-yard line. On first down he rambled 36 yards up the sideline to the Lions' 32-yard line. Magri lost three yards on a run, but Munroe carried it three straight downs for 14 yards for a first down at the South 21-yard line.

A clipping penalty set Keefe back to the 32-yard line and Unicorn receiver Juan Rivera made a diving catch of a Magri pass at the two-yard line. Munroe followed the catch with a touchdown, running it up the middle with 6:59 remaining in the third quarter for a 14-0 Unicorn lead following his extra point.

The offense especially sputtered — South's next three series producing a fumble and two punts. After the second punt Munroe ran three times for 29 yards to the Lions' 15-yard line. Landry ran for the touchdown from there, scoring with 4:36 in the game to finish any Lion hopes.

Keefe added a field goal on its next series, Munroe kicking it from 25 yards out for a 24-0 lead with 1:53 in the game.

Late South surge ties Wildcats

WESTON — Weston took a 2-0 lead only to have a pesky Newton South squad answer the call in the second half Friday, as both Dual County teams settled for a 2-all tie.

Weston scored six minutes into the contest on a cross from Alan Wang to Kevin Chin. Chin dribbled the ball and beat a defender before knocking it home.

Seven minutes later, Chin crossed the ball in front of the goal to Peter Casey, who headed it by goalie Ken Shifman to post an early 2-0 lead.

In the second half, the Wildcats relaxed and the Lions made them pay the price. South's Paulo Sepe took a shot from the right side after Weston could not clear the ball, spinning a shot off the hand of netminder Charles Fraser.

John Chapman quickly made up the rest of the deficit, scoring two minutes later to lock the score.

Lions fall

The Newton South Lions were outgunned by defending Division 1 South champion Plymouth-Carver, 4-2, at home.

The key to the Plymouth-Carver victory was that "they had a lot more experience and were more agressive on the field", Lion's soccer coach Manny Lopes said.

The first goal for the Lions was scored by Paulo Sepe. On a play started by Mark Wittenberg, Bill Trevens laid a pass through the center of the crease and Sepe easily netted the ball.

The final goal for the Lions came from Dave Cohn who was assisted by Ben Friedman. Friedman lofted a cross through the middle and Cohn headed the ball in for the goal.

North knotted

Phil Vasiliadis scored a goal and assisted on another as Newton North came from behind to tie Cambridge Rindge and Latin, 3-3, in a Suburban League contest.

Ed Ramos picked on North early, controlling the ball from 18-yards out before rebounding a shot off the goal post for the early score.

North tied the contest 30 minutes later on a direct kick from Steve Bourland from 40 yards out. Bourland's kick landed in the penalty area where Steve Plotkin headed the ball past the goalie to tie it at 1-1.

Early in the second half, Cambridge struck twice dropping Newton North to a 3-1 deficit. Oscar Fernandez got good foot on a Rene Nova corner kick and whacked it home.

Newton North failed to clear a ball in front of the net and Cambridge had three tries to get the ball in. Alden Ceral finally dropped it home for the 3-1 lead.

Vasiliadis started the comeback for North at 16:25 by feeding Adam Kinsey, who was cutting through the middle. Kinsey dropped the ball to Josh Albert and he went in alone upping the score to 3-2.

Vasiliadis teamed with Albert five minutes later to tie the game. Brian Cronin won the ball in the defensive area and passed it off to Vasiliadis, who led Albert with a perfect pass. Albert shot from 10 yards out to even the score.

Kayo Boxers

If Josh Albert was the spark, then Steve Bourland was the catalyst as the Newton North Tigers' soccer squad fired a 2-0 victory over visiting Brockton Thursday.

In an extremely close game, Albert tallied a goal and an assist, while Bourland set up both goals. Both teams played skillfully, and the teams battled scoreless throughout the first half. The game was so close that at the half, Newton and Brockton had both aimed exactly 12 shots at their opponent's net.

The Tigers broke the deadlock nine minutes into the second half. Albert lofted a corner kick which Bourland collected. After sidestepping the Brockton defender, Bourland slid a pass to Kenny Kazarosian about 18-yards from the goal. Kazarozian drilled the ball by Brockton goalie Sean Blair to put the Tigers ahead 1-0.

The Albert and Bourland duo teamed up again 15 minutes later to glue the game shut. Bourland took control of the ball at midfield and passed it through the middle to senior Brian Cronin. Cronin dropped his defender and hit a perfect cross in front of the goal, which Albert tapped into the corner of the net.

He praised the efforts of senior stopperback Zafar Kahn, sweeper Phil Vasiliades, fullbacks Matt Selig and Simon DeYoung, and goalkeeper Scott Devore. Fullback Bruce Anderson, a junior, played his "best game of the year." according to Brown.

"We just have to work on covering their strikers better," Brown said. "We let up a few shots because their men were just not marked."

North swimmers win opener

QUINCY — Sophomore Amanda Hulberg won the 200 individual medley and placed second in the 100 butterfly to pace Newton North to an easy, 107-58 victory over host Quincy Tuesday in the season-opener at the Lincoln-Hancock Community Pool.

Junior Karen Zaremba took the top spot in the 200 freestyle for Newton and sophomore Jenny Hagar won the breaststroke. Jenna Roberts was in Newton North's winning relay team and also placed second in the backstroke.

Newton North will swim at Cambridge, Rindge & Latin on Tuesday.

Tapping home equity for current needs

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith magazine

Even this late in the interest-rate cycle, you might cut housing expenses significantly by refinancing your present loan, says Better Homes and Gardens magazine. It also can be a timely way to tap your home equity for needs such as college tuition or remodeling.

Figure costs carefully before deciding. But don't wait too long: rates could be on their way up.

Over one-third of all recent mortgage closings were refinancings, most to take advantage of the sharp drop in interest rates. To tell if you still might benefit, start with the 2-2-2 rule: Your present loan rate should be 2 or more percentage points higher than today's rates; you bought the house at least two years ago; you plan to stay put for at least another two years.

Lower monthly costs are what most people seek when they refinance. Even if you didn't get caught with a peak rate a few years ago, refinancing can ease your budget nicely. Look at what you save with just a 2½-percent difference in rates, for example. Take a 30-year, $70,000, 12½-percent mortgage compared to a 10-percent loan: principal and interest payments drop by $133, from $747 to $614, a month. If you were dropping from a 14-percenter, you'd save $215 a month.

Refinancing also may generate extra cash, presuming your equity has risen sufficiently to cover the additional amount you want to borrow. You could pay off your $70,000, 12½-percent loan, for example, and borrow $80,000 at 10 percent for $45 less a month than you're paying now.

Any refinancing hits your pocketbook immediately with new closing costs: loan-origination fees, or "points" (each equaling 1 percent of the loan amount), appraisal fees, title search, and insurance. These out-of-pocket expenses can total as much as 5 percent or more of the new loan — $3,500 in our $70,000 example. That's when the question of time counts: How long will it take to work off the new closing costs before you begin to realize savings on your monthly payments?

A simple formula will tell: Divide your total closing costs ($3,500, say) by the difference between your old and new monthly payments ($133 in our example). The answer, 26.3, is the number of months required to recover expenses — a bit over two years.

Won't tax deductions speed up the savings? Not necessarily. For one thing, lower interest rates will drop your deduction unless you add significantly to the loan. For another, tax reform may put you in a lower bracket. On the other hand, the new legislation may make home-loan deductions even more attractive by eliminating other loan interest-rate deductions.

Also, the IRS has recently ruled that with refinancing, the deduction for points must be spread over the lifetime of the loan, not taken as a lump sum as you could with a mortgage used to buy or renovate a home. Check with your accountant, however; some think this IRS ruling will not hold up to a challenge.

One alternative could be to include your closing costs in the amount you borrow. That would add $35 or so to your monthly payments in our example but give you a larger tax deduction for mortgage interest.

Your present lender may shave out-of-pocket costs or the interest rate to keep your business, so come armed with information about competitive deals.

Don't be afraid to negotiate. Some lenders will let you trade closing costs for a slight hike in the rate. Some may forgo new title searches, or lighten attorney or appraisal costs.

The cheapest deal: See if you can amend your existing contract, rather than refinance.

Washer is put on the spot

By the editors
of Consumer Reports

In the never-ending battle to differentiate their products from the competition's, manufacturers often seek to attract customers by placing more emphasis on "special features." One prime example is the General Electric Spotscrubber washing machine.

Advertising for the Spotscrubber uses the word "revolutionary" and says it "virtually eliminates the need for pretreating, soaking or washing by hand." The before and after photos in the ads show impressive, if not quite perfect, results using the Spotscrubber feature on a T-shirt stained with motor oil, lipstick, ballpoint pen ink and mustard.

To put the claims to the test, the engineers at Consumer Reports purchased the higher-priced of two Spotscrubber models — the WWA8600G, listing for $479.

The Spotscrubber turned out to be a modified version of a regular, large-sized, top-loading washing machine with a "mini-basket." That's an accessory that GE has included on its fancier models for a number of years.

The new scrubbing feature works by using only a little water to dilute the detergent. You put as much detergent in the basket as you would for a small regular load, add up to 2½ pounds of laundry (a big tablecloth won't fit), and set a Spotscrubber timer knob on the control panel. During the washing cycle, the detergent is diluted by only two gallons of water instead of 15. After the concentrated washing, the machine proceeds to a double rinse and a spin.

The engineers tried the Spotscrubber on the same stains shown in the GE ads and added a few of their own — tea, cooking oil, grape juice, spaghetti sauce, makeup, grass and mud. In addition to staining a cotton/polyester material like the T-shirt shown in the ads, they dirtied swatches of cotton, denim and nylon. They used hot and warm water and different detergents. They tried cleaning the spots with a lot of detergent in another washing machine, as well as with hand washes, presoaks, bleach and cleaning fluid.

The engineers found that the Spotscrubber removed spots better than the regular washing machine — but only some of the time, with some stains, on some fabrics. For instance, it removed grape juice almost completely from cotton/polyester fabric, but left a noticeable stain on all-cotton fabric. Lipstick came off nylon, but not off cotton. Ballpoint pen ink came off cotton, but not off nylon. Results were generally better when hot water was used rather than warm.

The testers were unable to duplicate the results shown in the ads, which themselves were not perfect. The stains partially disappeared, but not as much as in GE's photo of the stained T-shirt.

New generation of heat pumps

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith Magazine

A new generation of better-engineered, higher-efficiency heat pumps is making its debut. These heat pumps are touted as tougher than their pioneering ancestors — better able to handle heavy heating and cooling demands, easier to service, and more economical to operate.

Manufacturers are hoping the new technology will revive the heat pump's sullied reputation among homeowners. Early models, introduced in the 1950s and early '60s, were flops, prone to malfunction and uneconomical to operate given the low cost of competing fuels.

During the 1973 energy crunch, however, heat pumps reemerged as a way to get more BTUs for the buck. They were especially favored in moderate climates where air-conditioning loads were heaviest and heating requirements light.

Today, an estimated 70 percent of heat pump installation is in new construction. Across the country, interest in the reengineered heat pumps has increased, partially due to fierce competition for the home heating business. Electric utilities pose the heat pump as an alternative to natural gas.

Consumers are facing complicated heating and cooling decisions, decisions to which they may be wedded for a long time.

Before you decide whether or not a heat pump will meet your needs, there are several factors to consider:

Get two or three contractors to estimate the installation cost of a heat pump for your home versus the cost of an alternative system.

If the heat pump installation costs more than an alternative system, figure out how many years it will take your heat pump to pay back its higher initial cost with lower annual operating costs. You can approximate this by dividing the extra cost you'd pay for a heat pump installation by the estimated annual operating savings.

Make sure expert service personnel are available should you need them. Ask if your heating and cooling contractor is an authorized heat pump dealer and if the personnel have attended a manufacturer's or other training school. Also ask about an extended warranty program for your heat pump.

Focussing attention on windows

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

When it comes to decorating, it sometimes seems there is nothing new under the sun. Take windows, for example.

Some years it's balloon shades or the layered look. Then a simpler point of view will prevail and everyone will go back to plain draw draperies.

As a major contributor to a room's ambience, window treatments closely follow general decorative style themes and their ceaseless merry-go-round of successive styles.

Recently, however, technology and new materials have produced new products such as vertical blinds and pleated window shades. Pleated shades are useful in applications calling for a soft look, such as the French country, English country and Victorian styles currently popular.

Vertical blinds are especially appropriate as a contemporary treatment with great flexibility for sliding glass doors and for situations in which a great deal of control of the intensity of the natural light is desirable.

According to several manufacturers, the new products have been developed in response to the greater use of unusual shapes, such as bays, angled and arched windows.

Janet Birch, senior designer for Graber Industries, for example, says a collection of pleated shades and vertical blinds offered by her company coordinates with a variety of other home furnishings, such as fabrics and wallpaper. The collection designed under license by Gear matches other Gear home furnishings products by other manufacturers.

Kirsch Co. has recently introduced a pleated shade for a skylight application that opens and closes with a telescoping wand, thus eliminating the need for a dangling cord.

"Recent developments in home remodeling and new construction have focused attention on the shape of windows," according to Birch. "Pleated shades in particular have proven to be an effective application for difficult-to-fit windows."

Treatments for arched windows generally utilize two shades, one stationary fan-shaped shade to cover the upper arch and a standard operating shade to cover the operative part of the window. The bottom-up shade, which pulls up instead of down, can screen unattractive views and provide privacy.

Vertical blinds

Originally, vertical blinds were made either of aluminum or flat PVC plastic in white or off-white, but over the last five years, hundreds of fabrics, colors and textures have been made available. There are both soft and hard-surface materials in textures and weights that range from lightweight sheers to heavy tapestry-like light blockers.

Verticals are the window treatment of choice when you have a great deal of sunlight to control because you can arrange the angles of the louvers to direct the light where you want it and in a variety of intensities.

They open and close as a unit and the individual louvers can also be angled to admit a lot, a little or no light. This flexibility has made them especially popular in Florida and the West.

Though most vertical blinds are still sold on a custom basis, it is possible to buy stock vertical blinds for some popular sizes of patio doors in stores and in mail-order catalogues.

A vertical's price is influenced by two factors: the type of headrail and the louver fabric. While they may look the same, the more expensive verticals usually have better working mechanisms that will also hold up longer. For example, Graber offers two qualities of headrail. The best has a 10-year warranty; the other a three-year warranty. The best headrail on a seven-foot-wide sliding door size with an inexpensive louver material has a suggested retail price of $235.

The second type would list at $199 in the same louver fabric, which would be a solid color PVC or aluminum material. An expensive choice in fabric for the louvers, such as a boucle, would be in the $500 range for both types of headrail, said Birch.

There are a number of regional companies, but five or six national manufacturers whose products are distributed throughout the country would probably be competitive in price, in her opinion.

Pleated shades

Pleated shades are usually all or almost all polyester, because this fabric retains a pleat better than practically any other fiber. Sometimes a small amount of another fiber, such as acrylic or linen, will be added to vary the texture of the shade.

Pleated shades are usually a custom installation, especially for the more interesting patterns and materials. However, stock pleated shades, usually in white or ivory, are available to fit some common window sizes.

Pleated shades cost "a few dollars more than mini-blinds, but less than verticals," said Birch.

Interesting decorating ideas using pleated shades and vertical blinds include overlays, which layer one fabric on top of another for a two-toned effect. A stripe of two or more fabrics or colors is also possible in both vertical blinds and pleated shades.

Help finance Israeli day care centers and homes

BROOKLINE — Na'amat USA is making their annual appeal to the public for contributions to the Spiritual Adoption Fund which provides the finances to care for needy children living in Na'amat homes in Israel.

The first Na'amat home was built in 1941 in a village near Haifa, Israel. It began with room big enough for 15 children and grew, with the backing of the Greater Boston Council Na'amat, to a facility for 50 children.

Soon this home proved too small to accomodate the children in the area. Shortly thereafter, the Boston Na'amat USA members built a special facility to house over 100 children and, in addition, offered day care to working mothers.

Presently, the Na'amat children's homes in Israel care for more than 22,000 children and members of Na'amat USA are involved year round in raising money to support the homes.

A part of each year is designated for a concentrated effort, to reach out to the public and ask them to help the children, some are orphans and all are from deprived socioeconomic backgrounds. This major and important fund raising effort is now in progress.

If a child is "Spiritually Adopted" a donation of $360 will care for the child for one year and the benefactor receives a picture of the child. Donations in any amount are welcome. Please send your donation to the Greater Boston Counciil, Na'amat USA, 325 Harvard St., Room 11, Brookline or call 731-8378 for more information.

The annual Spiritual Adoption Luncheon which helps raise funds for the children will be held Nov. 19 at the Park Plaza Hotel in Boston.

Sophie and Haim Rejman will be honored for their devotion to Na'amat and Israel. Sheila Decter, executive director of the Jewish Congress, will be the keynote speaker. Tickets are available at the office.

METAL OF CHOICE

If you are looking for a metal that symbolizes purity, strength and rarity, platinum must be the first choice. All the platinum that has ever been refined would fit inside a 15-foot cube. Because it is rarer and heavier than other precious metals, platinum is often called the "noblest" metal. As for rarity, most platinum used for jewelry in this country is at least 95 percent pure. This is because platinum does not require the addition of base metals to give it strength. In fact, platinum is so durable that even potent acids cannot corrode it. In addition, platinum never tarnishes. Oxidation does not affect this noble metal. It always will be the same cool, white color it was the day it was purchased.

The traditional metal of choice for diamond engagement rings is yellow gold. But consider the color of the diamond and how much more brilliant it would shine in a platinum setting. Whatever is the metal you choose for your precious stones CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" will professionally set them and bring out their natural beauty. We take pride in creating unique designs for your distinctive tastes. One of our specialities is the display of loose diamonds we have including the exclusive 144 facet diamond. See us at 109 Dalby St., Newton, Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

HINT:
Since platinum is so pure, it does not cause allergic reactions.

Keeping up with the Italians

By James Egan
Staff Writer

DEDHAM — A rider on the Newton-based Boston Road Club bicycle racing team had a stellar performance Sunday in the 184-mile Coors Dedham 350th Stage Race.

Edward Richards made a breakaway with an Italian rider in a 53-mile race from Dedham to Rhode Island and back.

Richards and Euzebio Lucini rode to a minute and a half lead in the race that was the third stage of a four part race.

Richards took tenth in the stage race, finishing four minutes and 26 seconds behind Lucini who won the overall race.

The Italians took three of the top four spots with Euzebio Lucini winning the Coors Yellow Overall Leader's Jersey. Stefano Morelli took second with Alberto Zanabonni fourth. Michael Rounds of Warwick, Rhode Island grabbed third overall.

The racers slugged it out in four races over the three days. In a stage race, the overall winner is determined by the lowest added time after all the stages.

The highlight of the weekend of racing was the final leg, the high-speed, D'Angelo's Downtown Dedham Race. After a 15-mile breakaway, Rounds won a fierce sprint by inches over the other Italian, Alberto Zanabonni.

Only 26 of the 100 starters survived to the finish line of the final stage due to the high speed and grueling distances.

Friday

On Friday, Brad Tanner of Portsmouth N.H., won the six-mile individual time trial up Blue Hill in 16 minutes and 11 seconds. Morelli finished three seconds back in second place, Rounds finished sixth, 18 seconds back and Lucini finished 11th, 43 seconds back.

Saturday

Lucini won the overall yellow leader's jersey by winning the 105-mile International Bicycle Center Road Race in 4 hours, seventeen minutes and 40 seconds. Morelli was second at 42 seconds behind. Rounds was third at nine seconds behind. Zanabonni was fourth, one minute and 14 seconds back.

The Italian team tactics won this race. They sent Morelli out alone at the 56-mile mark and he powered to a minute and a half lead.

The strategy here, explained Lucini, was to get Morelli, who is not a good hill climber, out in front of the pack with a comfortable margin before the final 500-foot climb up Great Blue Hill. The three other Italians worked hard to slow the chasing pack by soft pedalling at the front, enabling Morelli to stay away.

But with 18 miles to go — once Morelli's lead was secure — Lucini and Zanabonni attacked. They bridged the gap to Morelli within 10 miles. The only American fast enough to stay with the Italians on the attack was Rounds. The four entered the final 500-foot, narrow, winding climb together.

Here it was every man for himself as Morelli attacked with a half mile to go, dropping Rounds and Zanabonni. But Morelli, exhausted after riding over 50 miles, sputtered. Seeing Morelli weaken, Lucini — a superb hillclimber — jumped gingerly away for the win and the overall leader's Yellow Jersey.

At the top of the hill, Morelli collapsed and threw his bike down in apparant anger at his teammates for closing his lead gap. But after emotions cooled, Morelli said he was happy to see his teammates finish on the hill with him and take the top spots.

For winning, Lucini received a 15 second time bonus, which was deducted from his overall time. His lead over Morelli, who got a 10 second time bonus, was now 47 seconds. Rounds, who got a five second bonus, was one minute and 10 seconds back in the overall standings.

Sunday Morning

Lucini won the 53-mile, Transcript Newspapers Road Race in one hour, 58 minutes and 53 seconds. This race went from Dedham to Rhode Island and back, throught most of the towns that were part of Dedham in 1636.

At about the halfway point, after some futile early breakaway attempts by American riders, Lucini attacked at 48 m.p.h. on a narrow winding downhill on the border of Woonsocket, R.I. and Bellingham, Mass. Here, Lucini and Richards, began building a lead of one minute and 30 seconds. The two worked together into Dedham by taking turns breaking the wind. Lucini outsprinted Richards by seven seconds at the finish retaining his overall Yellow Leader's Jersey over Morelli and Rounds.

Sunday Afternoon

The D'Angelo's Downtown Dedham Race was action packed as many riders crashed on the 120-degree, hairpin turn in front of Dedham Bike and Leather.

Rounds and Zanabonni slipped away from the pack after 10 miles while the other Italians and Round's teammated from the Broadway Kitchen and Bath Team soft pedaled at the front of the pack, allowing the their teammates to stay away.

Rounds won the race by less than an inch in a wild, 35 m.p.h. sprint before the cheering crowd.

But the 40 second bonus that Rounds picked up for winning the stage was not enough to put move him up in the oveall standings. Morelli got third.

After time bonuses, Morelli finished second overall, one minute and 12 seconds back with Rounds finishing third, one minute and 30 seconds behind Lucini. Zanabonni, three minutes and 28 seconds back. Albonetti, who expended himself by working to keep the pack from catching his teammate, finished 18th overall, five minutes and 19 seconds behind the leader.

Rockport artist demonstration set

NEWTON — The acclaimed Rockport artist, Michael Stoffa, will give a lecture-demonstration: a marine landscape, in oils, on Oct. 2 at 7:30 p.m. at The Women's Workshop, 72 Columbus St., Newton Highlands. Fee for nonmembers is $2.

Critiques, lectures and workshops given by outstanding New England artists are organized at the art association throughout the year.

Highly regarded as a lecturer-demonstrator, Stoffa holds his audience's attention by offering painting tips and with lively stories.

Stoffa, currently president of the Rockport Art Association, captures on canvas the light and mood of the beauty before him. His subjects are as varied as nature itself. His paintings are displayed in galleries and collections throughout the world, including those of Shirley Booth, Patrick Dennis, Dorothy Hamil, Rep. Mavroules and at the Canojaharie Art Museum of Canojaharie, N.Y. He maintains a gallery in New York, spends summers on Cape Ann and winters in the southwest and Mexico.

City sued over 10% housing law

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city is being sued for $500,000 by attorney Mark White.

White, in a suit filed Friday in Land Court, is contending the Board of Aldermen violated the civil rights of his clients, Laurence and Sherrie Cutler, who unsuccessfully sought aldermanic approval of their petition to convert a two-family home on Church Street into a three-family condominum complex.

In addition to the violation of civil rights, White is contending that the board, by failing to approve the petition, "abused its legislative discretion, acted in excess of authority and acted in an unconstitutional manner in terms of equal protection under the law."

"This whole thing is a fiasco," he said of his dealings with aldermen. "These people have no guidelines and they just do what they want to with disregard for the law. This kind of behavior can't be tolerated by anyone. None of these people wear robes."

White's bone of contention is the 10 Percent ordinance. He said the Cutler's petition does not apply to the controversial housing ordinance designed to increase the city's stock of affordable housing.

The Cutler's petition is an Ordinance 30 conversion, designed to protect the city's older homes by allowing owners to convert internal space for additional housing.

Earlier, the Law Department ruled the 10 Percent ordinance does not apply to Ordinance 30 conversions, but the Land Use Committee had voted to request a contribution from the Cutlers despite that ruling.

White said the Land Use Committee and the board overstepped their jurisdiction by asking for a monetary contribution to the 10 Percent ordinance. In addition, he said because the ordinance has no specific provisions for sub 10-unit developments, the board acted "arbitrarily and capriciously" by asking for a contribution.

Calling the board's request for a contribution "blackmail," White said he will "try to get a determination from the court that the board can't arbitrarily determine what it wants from developers."

Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce, who could not comment on the specifics of the case, said it was unusual because the petition was denied despite 15 aldermen voting in favor of it.

Because the Cutlers were requesting a special permit, requiring 16 votes, their petition was denied. Peirce said he will try to concentrate his efforts on the seven aldermen who voted against the petition.

"I want to find out what the land use factors were in those decisions," he said.

Peirce added it was too early to tell how proposed modifications to the ordinance, including a sliding scale developed by Alderman Joshua Davidson for sub-10

Addition to low income law denied

By Les Orsini

NEWTON — Alderman Matthew Jefferson pleaded with the board Monday night not to back away from voting on his proposal to make conversions of single- and two-family homes part of the city's low-income housing ordinance.

The board, which was considering holding the measure until aldermen refine the formula for developer contributions to the city's low-income housing stock, heeded his call, then voted the ordinance down.

Jefferson's proposal needed 16 votes — or two-thirds of the Board of Aldermen — to pass. The vote left him three votes short.

More than two weeks ago, Alderman Joshua Davidson convinced his colleagues to table the measure until Monday night's meeting.

Jefferson's measure would force developers making Ordinance 30 conversions — that is, adding units onto older single- and two-family homes — to contribute cash to the city's affordable housing under the 10 Percent Ordinance.

That ordinance requires developers receiving a special permit to build more units than allowed by right, to contribute 10 percent of the extra units or a cash equivalent for building affordable housing.

Problems have arisen when developers asked for permission to build less than 10 extra units. The city and developers have often disagreed over the size of donations in those instances.

Davidson, a member of Carol Robinson's 10 Percent Ordinance Subcommittee, has worked out a sliding scale for such contribu-

Neighbors trash plans for landfill

By Howard Altman

NEWTON — On light poles, trees and store fronts in portions of West Newton and Auburndale, block-letter signs announce to all how residents feel about the Rumford Avenue landfill.

"Don't Dump on Us," read the nearly 100 signs tacked up by Judy Gorgone, her friends and relatives. According to neighbors and the aldermen who represent the area, people are "fed up" with problems associated with the city dump.

While the latest concern centers on a proposed plan to compost leaves and other organic material at the site, one alderman said objections to that plan are really just the tip of the iceberg.

"I think objections to the composting plan are symptoms of a much deeper concern," Alderman George Mansfield said. "I think a lot of people want to know what is going to happen to the landfill in the future."

Some 40 residents expressed their concern about the composting plan last week to city and state officials at a neighborhood meeting at the Burr School. Mansfield and area Aldermen Polly Bryson and Richard McGrath said while the neighbors weren't totally opposed to composting, they were not confident that the city could manage the program.

New development approved for Newton Corner

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — It may not be an ideal solution, but aldermen Monday night approved a plan to build 48 housing units and subsidized commercial space on the Watertown-Newton line in Newton Corner.

Newton Corner Alderman Ronald Marini, a staunch opponent of development in the area, gave an impassioned plea in support of the plan by developer George Fahey to build the new complex at 264 Centre St.

"This is a difficult item," he said. "I have always been concerned about the size, density and height of development. But, I also am concerned with the issue of housing. I don't want an office building to be built here. I want people who will live in the neighborhood."

Marini explained that after meeting with neighbors, Fahey representatives agreed to downscale the original plans from 67 units and reduce the proposed height of the building from 42 feet to 36 feet.

"This is a matter of the quality of life," he said. "I don't want people who will come into the city at 9 a.m. to go to work at an office building, leave at 5 p.m., and not care about this area. I think that this is a good compromise that will create needed housing and protect this neighborhood."

While it will not create "affordable" housing, Marini said the condominium units, priced at about $270,000 each, would bring some housing back to the neighborhood.

In addition, he said the plan to subsidize small retail stores

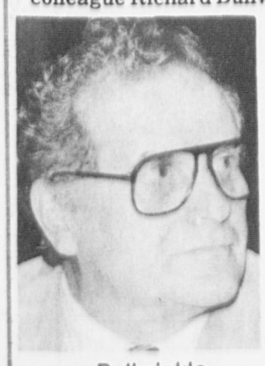
Aldermen seeing red following tiff

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — An attempt by Alderman Louis Irwin to suspend debate at a joint Finance and Programs and Planning committee meeting last week sparked a nose-to-nose confrontation with colleague Richard Bullwinkle.



Bullwinkle

The argument flared just after 10:30 p.m. as Sam Johnson, senior principal for Hay Management Inc., was explaining his company's system for evaluating jobs and determining fair salaries.

Irwin, who is chairman of Programs and Planning, said he would move to suspend discussion at 11 p.m. so the committee could take up other items.

Bullwinkle, a personnel specialist for Raytheon, had been raising questions during Johnson's presentation and took offense at Irwin's move.

"We're being squeezed and I don't like that," Bullwinkle said, threatening to hold up the issue when it comes before the full board if the two committees adopted Irwin's suggestion. "I wanted to hear this."

Other aldermen told Bullwinkle he could challenge Irwin's ruling by bringing it to a vote at 11 p.m. But when Irwin asked Johnson to resume his presentation, Bullwinkle rose and threatened to leave.

The chairman then got up from his seat and facing his colleague, ordered him to leave the room. When Bullwinkle refused, Irwin called a brief recess and left.

"I'm being told by a schoolteacher to leave the room ... an elected official ... no way," Bullwinkle said of Irwin, who is a professor at Simmons College.

"I wanted to debate this for whatever it took," he told the remaining aldermen during the recess.

Irwin later explained that he called for a recess because rational discussion was no longer possible. "As a chairman, I will not conduct a

Tax law nips into bed and breakfast

Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

WABAN — Louise Whittlesey, of Irving Street, offers her home and hospitality to three different groups of visitors each month because she meets some "perfectly marvelous people" that way.

But a recent state decision to tax bed and breakfast operators as it does hotels and motels means she may have to spend more time keeping books than keeping company.

Whittlesey says, however, she will give up her bed and breakfast operation if the paperwork involved in calculating the meals and rooms taxes becomes "too burdensome."

Under the hotel-motel tax law, Whittlesey, along with approximately 1,000 other bed and breakfast operators in Massachusetts, must start paying a 5 percent meals and a 5.7 percent rooms tax, retroactive to 1979 in some cases.

Newton and some other communities have also been allowed to charge an additional 4 percent rooms tax, which goes directly to the community.

But, according to Newton Mayor Theodore Mann, taxes from the city's approximately 20 bed and breakfast operations will not make a "big difference in terms of our finances."

Although the state also stands to collect little in bed and breakfast taxes, Harry Durning, the Department of Revenue's director of communications, still believes that to be fair to hotels and motels, bed and breakfasts should be taxed too.

"The Commonwealth is not at stake, but equity is," he said.

More understanding than most bed and breakfast owners, Whittlesey said she would not mind paying the rooms tax, but the meals tax is "too vague and doesn't apply."

"How do you put a value on an English Muffin," a piece of toast or a scrambled egg? asks Rep. Susan Schur (D-Newton). She is backing a bill filed by Rep. Marilyn L. Travinski (D-Southbridge) that would exempt owner-occupied private residences with five or fewer rooms set aside for bed and breakfast operations from paying the rooms and meals taxes.

Afterall, says Newton resident Bernice Chesler, who has written two books on bed and breakfast operations, taxing bed and breakfasts is like taxing homeowners for feeding and housing their friends and family.

'The shoe doesn't fit . . .'

Bernice Chesler

"The shoe doesn't fit because they're not really businesses," Chesler says. Bed and breakfast is a "people to people kind of program" through which "renumeration is not a lifestyle."

The hotel industry, however, sees bed and breakfast operations as competition. As a result, Shur said, the industry pressured the revenue department to apply the hotel-motel tax to bed and breakfast operations.

Board denies addition to low—income housing ordinance

tions and wanted the board not to decide on Jefferson's proposal until the Legislation and Rules Committee refines its wording.

Jefferson, however, fears the city is backing off its commitment to develop affordable housing and is weakening the 10 Percent Ordinance. His Ordinance 30 proposal would simply stipulate "something we've been doing all along," he said.

Several alderman sided with Davidson, saying the board should wait until it has a clear formula for small conversions.

"We'd be voting on something the consequences of which we know not," said Alderman Rodney Barker. "The formulas coming out of Legislation and Rules will give this ordinance teeth."

Davidson indicated that local attorney Mark White intends to sue the board because of its attempt to secure a contribution from his clients, Laurence and Sherrie Cutler. They want to convert a two-family home into a three-unit condominium. White contends this is an Ordinance 30 conversion and not subject to the city's low-income housing law.

Alderman Bruce Carmichael urged the board not to worry about lawsuits. "How many times has this Board of Aldermen been sued before?" he asked. "If we're going to worry about that, then we'd better go home."

The move to wait for a refinement of Davidson's formula is an effort to exclude developers making Ordinance 30 conversions from contributing to the city's affordable housing stock, Carmichael said. "Ladies and gentlemen, this is just an attempt to bury this ordinance," he said.

The board first voted 12 to 10 against postponing a vote on Jefferson's proposal. Members then voted 13 to 9 in favor of the measure, leaving it three votes short.

Suit against city could imperil bylaws

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mark White's $500,000 against the city and the Board of Aldermen could imperil city laws designed to increase the pool of affordable housing, some city officials said.

"As we go forward with the case," Asst. City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce said, "we run a risk that a judge will decide against us. That is always a possibility when you go to court."

White is suing the city in an attempt to overturn the 10 Percent housing ordinance requiring residential developers to contribute cash or housing units to the affordable housing stock. He said the board has acted without any set standards when applying conditions of the ordinance, a practice he called unfair.

But, city officials like Aldermen Richard McGrath and Cynthia Creem said White is acting out of greed and frustration.

"I don't know what windmill he is tilting at, but the net result is that he could harm the people who benefit from the housing created by the 10 Percent ordinance," McGrath said. "Anytime you challenge a law in court, you are putting it in jeopardy."

McGrath charged that White and his clients Laurence and Sherrie Cutler, were motivated primarily by greed.

"For the selfish, greedy motives of one unit, to jeopardize the 10 Percent ordinance is unconscionable," he said. "They are both to blame. What bothers me most about the Cutlers is that they came before the board with a sob story about how they were misled into buying a house.

"They also tried to pass themselves off as being naive," he added. "They are about as naive as (developer Michael) Iodice. At least with Iodice, he comes right at you. He doesn't snivel, whine and come in through the back door."

The Cutlers declined the opportunity to comment on McGrath's charges.

Creem, chairman of the Land Use Committee, said she could not understand White's rationale.

"If we were sued everytime someone's petition were denied," she said, "we would always be in court. I can't understand why Mr. White is suing us."

McGrath, who voted against the petition, said White's case is flimsy at best.

"The petition was defeated during the summer when we asked for a contribution and it was denied this fall when we didn't ask for a contribution. The case lost on its merits, because it was not a good petition," he said.

Creem, who also voted against the petition, agreed with McGrath that it did not live up to the stipulations of an Ordinance 30 Conversion.

"To support a petition like this," she said, "I have to find that the public good is being served, either by the creation of additional affordable units or the protection of an old building. To me, this was not the case in the Cutler petition."

White said the whole situation is ironic, because he helped author the ordinance as a member of the board in the late 70s.

"I helped write the law," he said, "and now I am trying to get it thrown out. I want the court to overturn the board's denial of the Cutler petition and I want the 10 Percent ordinance declared unconstitutional."

Aldermen squelch pre-existing use

NEWTON — A plan to legalize an existing four-family home on Washington Street was killed by the Board of Aldermen Monday night.

The home, owned by Robert Imperato and Jill Freint, apparently has existed as a four-family home for at least 20 years. But a series of events sparked by an anonymous letter to the Building Department last year has left the home owners faced with a potential denial of their occupancy permit.

The letter, said by Alderman Paul Daley to have come from anti-illegal apartment crusaders Leon and Shirley Jaffe, led to an inspection of the property that resulted in a cease and desist order.

Monday night's board decision was a defeat for the owners' attempt to bring the building within the city codes by appealing to the proper city channels.

Though the owners' plan was lauded by some aldermen, who pointed out that Imperato and Freint are providing affordable housing and have repaired and maintained one of the city's older homes, the owners are caught in a legislative "Catch 22."

They appeared Monday night in an effort to obtain a special permit that would allow the four-family home to exist in a single-family zone. But, because the property is 128 square feet short of the 20,000 square feet needed for such a conversion in that zone, many aldermen voted against the petition to avoid future conflicts.

Adding to the owners' woes was a recent decision by the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) that fell one vote short of a waiver of the 20,000 square foot requirement.

Debate centered on whether the board should ignore the ZBA decision because Imperato and Freint are owner/occupants who are renting two of the remaining three units for $500 a month, considered by most aldermen to be a very reasonable rent for the area.

Alderman Richard Bullwinkle argued that despite any individual merits of the petition, it should be denied because it "will set a dangerous precedent" for future petitions that may not have such merits.

"There is a process that has to be followed here," he said. "We cannot continue to violate the rules."

Drug 'Dial-a-Tip' phone line now open

NEWTON - The Police Department Drug Investigation Unit (DIU) has installed a special confidential telephone line so the public can inform detectives of any information they might have concerning drug dealings in the city.

"Dial-a-Tip" is predominantly concerned with drug-related information, but Chief William F. Quinn said it can be used for any crime-related information citizens have.

A 24-hour answering machine will take messages. Callers can either leave their names on the machine or leave an anonymous tip, he said. All calls will be confidential.

Officials mourn revenue share loss

NEWTON — The federal Revenue Sharing Program has been dying a slow death for years, and Congressman Barney Frank — one of its strongest supporters — watched helplessly as the final nail was hammered into its coffin two weeks ago.

The Democratic lawmaker from Newton had led one last effort to breathe life into the program by attempting to fund it in a Congressional appropriations resolution.

But the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives removed the funding request from the resolution. Frank chose not to dissent because President Ronald Reagan and the Republican-controlled Senate both vowed to kill Revenue Sharing if it passed the House.

"The president absolutely swore up and down he would veto it," said Frank last week.

Established in 1972 during the term of President Richard M. Nixon, the Revenue Sharing Program distributes federal funds to communities across the nation based primarily on population.

Newton last year received $2 million from the program while Boston was granted $18 million.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann underscored the importance of the program's demise by beginning his press conference last week with what amounted to an obituary for Revenue Sharing.

As Frank has in the past, Mann praised the program because a community could spend the money basically as it saw fit. Newton used its share to pay the salaries of public safety employees.

"It gave you a range of five categories in which the money could be spent," the mayor said. "It was an example of money coming back from the federal government unimpaired."

The state has cushioned Bay State communities against the loss of Revenue Sharing by promising to return 90 percent of the cuts.

But even with this, Newton stands to lose $200,000 annually because of the program's death, Mann said. And no one knows how long the state will reimburse communities for the loss of Revenue Sharing, Mann said.

Thanks primarily to the federal government's massive budget deficit, the worst may not be over, Mann said.

Motorist narrowly eludes river plunge

NEWTON — A 32-year-old Framingham man narrowly escaped sailing in the Charles River when he lost control of his van and crashed into a walk ramp on Bridge Street Monday morning.

The operator of the van, Gary Curry, reportedly was treated and released at Newton-Wellesley Hospital for a head injury. Witnesses said it appeared Curry struck his head on the windshield, which was cracked from impact.

Curry was traveling north on Bridge Street when his van crashed into the right front end of an oncoming car at 11:57 a.m., police said. He evidently lost control of the van, veered off the road down a hill and crashed into the ramp, according to police. The wooden walk ramp extends from the sidewalk to the entrance of Sea Data Corporation at 1 Bridge Street.

"I was upstairs working when we heard this loud, thunderous noise," Jim Davis, a Sea Data Corporation employee said. "We came running out and found the front end of the van crashed into the ramp."

'Mini-mall' should ease Newton Centre traffic woes

NEWTON — What is now a large hole in the ground near the Newton Centre fire station will soon be an up-scale retail shopping complex, according to the project's architect.

A one-story "mini-mall," being constructed on the site of the former Jenny's gas station at 1184 Centre St., should be completed early next year according to architect Leonard Saroff.

The key to the project, built and designed by Newton residents, is to minimize the effect on density and traffic, Saroff says.

"We received approval from the Building Department to build a three-story building," he says. "We filed a perimeter plan before the moratorium went into effect, but we were very much concerned with the impact on the area and we designed the building to downgrade that impact."

Under the moratorium ordinance, implemented in March, no commercial construction could begin for a one-year period. Because Willow Street Trust filed the perimeter plan four days before the moratorium went into effect, protecting the prior zoning status of the land for three years, the property owners are allowed to erect a three-story commercial building without approval from the Board of Aldermen.

But, Saroff says because those involved in the project all live and work in the city, the project was scaled down.

The revised plans call for a 12-foot glass kiosk to be constructed over a 10- to 12-foot basement. The kiosk will contain one retail store while the basement will contain three, Saroff says.

In addition to the retail space, Saroff says plans call for 15 parking spaces and "plenty of open space."

"We wanted to create something that will upgrade Newton Centre," he says. "We all live here and we want something that will be an asset to the city."

Saroff says the new building will be a combination of modern and colonial architecture and will include roof slating from the Jenny's gas station, which was in it's heyday in the 1920s.

"Our intention is to try and create a bandstand in the park, with landscaping," he says.

He adds once the foundation is laid and the kiosk erected, which should be January, the complex will be nearly complete.

"Once we get the exterior up, which we are trying to do before winter really sets in, the building will be 90 percent completed."

The project, according to Building Department records, will cost an estimated $425,000.

"Because of the high cost," Saroff says, "we will have to rent out the spaces to high-grade retail stores."

Local residents indicted on drug charge

CAMBRIDGE — A Middlesex County grand jury last week indicted two Newton residents on drug charges, a Newtonville man in connection with a separate drug offense, and a Tewksbury man for snatching a woman's pocketbook.

Edward Griffin Jr., 23, of 16 Elliott Terrace and Jane E. Lehr, 33, of the same address, were indicted on charges of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute and conspiracy to violate state narcotics laws in connection an alleged June 20, 1986 incident.

Sox fulfilling their autumn mission

Like a perfect Indian summer, October baseball brings a distinctive glow. Beginning tonight, the Red Sox will be on the Fenway Park diamond, trying to extend their glorious 1986 season through the American League championship series and on to the World Series. There may be the edge of a chill on the air, but this is what baseball is all about.

The Boston season has already been more thrilling than anyone dared hope six months ago. The excitement slowly built as the Sox, led by the peerless young pitcher Roger Clemens and a core of reliable veterans, turned back each rival in turn to take the league's Eastern Division crown.

For the Boston fan, though, morbid fear perpetually lurks behind the glow of hope. Though the Red Sox have made it to the World Series — even taken it to the final game — three times in the last generation, they have failed to win it all. And pennants which seemed to be in hand have been snatched away within the final weeks of several other seasons. Some call it fate, some call it folding, but every fan has it in the back of his mind.

Regardless of history, though, there is every reason to look forward to these playoffs, which begin in Boston and then move to Anaheim over the weekend. This edition of the Red Sox has no shortage of talent or potential heroes. The seasoned outfielder Jim Rice has produced one of the finer seasons of a fine career. Designated hitter Don Baylor, acquired just before the season began, has delivered as promised: the long ball and a measure of clubhouse leadership. As per usual, Wade Boggs hits like a champion. Bill Buckner, Marty Barrett and Dwight Evans have been steadily productive in the clutch. Bruce Hurst and Dennis Boyd have weathered their physical and emotional lows to round out the pitching staff behind Clemens. And the skipper, John MacNamara, has survived the losing streaks, the critics and the doubters. He fits this club.

The players and many fans let on as though the mission will not be completed until the playoffs and World Series are won. But in truth, this season has already been a great success. The 1986 Red Sox, picked to go nowhere, have already provided a season of thrills and satisfaction. This is the day to savor that one more time, then prepare for the second season, which holds even more promise than the first.

NRA still using rapid-fire approach

The National Rifle Association has gone off on another arms-for-the-citizen binge.

Having just made a pitch to make sale of machine guns to the public legal, it now wants the government to allow the import of "Striker-12" semiautomatic shotguns for private owners.

The gun, manufactured in South Africa, has a revolving cylinder which holds 12 shells that can be loaded with different size shot and can be fired as fast as the trigger can be pulled. An advertisement says it has "awesome firepower."

The federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms has banned the gun because it "was specifically designed for military and law enforcement uses."

Hazardous waste question called faulty

On Saturday, Sept. 27 I was confronted by a young volunteer outside my local market. I was given a brochure on Question 4 and an obviously rehersed speech on the merits of hazardous waste cleanup. Having some knowledge of this proposal, I was curious about what she had to say and about the brochure's content. What I learned should be a lesson to all voters.

First, the young, idealistic volunteer had never read the 14 page initiative petition and had little working knowledge of its complex proposals.

Second, the brochure that she was distributing contains faulty information. The brochure state that Question 4 will test public water supplies for contaminants. There is no provision in the petition requiring testing of water supplies.

The existence of hazardous waste sites in Massachusetts is a serious problem of public health and safety which needs more governmental attention as soon as possible. But Question 4 is so seriously flawed that I doubt its workability. The cost of this law will be insupportable in terms of tax dollars. This bill places the responsibility for cleanup of hazardous waste upon the state government and ultimately upon the taxpayer. The petition mandates an unrealistic and confusing timetable for finding sites. Although the bill's proponents estimate there are 1,500 waste sites in the state, the petition requires that 4,000 sites be listed in the first four years. There are other problems with Question 4 — inadequate citizen participation at each site, possible infringement of due process and no funding mechanism.

Voters should be wary of glib brochures and poorly informed volunteers. Take the time to ask questions and find out the facts. Question 4 is an impractical, unrealistic and unworkable proposal. It deserves a NO vote.

Committee opposes aid to private schools

Continued support for public education is a critical investment in the future. The Newton School Committee has voted to publicize our opposition to the Public Tax Dollars for Private Schools Amendment, which is Question 2 on the Nov. 4 ballot.

Question 2 is a proposal to amend the Massachusetts state constitution to allow public tax dollars to be spent for aid, materials, and services to private schools. It would give the legislature the power to spend millions of dollars to subsidize private education. Proposition 2 1/2, inadequately funded state mandates, and anticipated reductions in federal funding are already eroding the resources available to public education.

The vast majority of our students attend public schools which are responsible for educating all children who enroll, including those who are economically disadvantaged and those in need of special services. The Public Aid for Private Schools Amendment would divert funds desperately needed by public school students to private schools.

Parents are free to choose private or religious schooling as an alternative to public schools. However, taxpayers should not have to pay for this choice with public dollars.

In 1982, Massachusetts voters overwhelmingly rejected a proposal similar to Question 2. We urge voters to again vote no to public aid for private schools on November 4.

Black teachers should be integrated equally

I am writing in response to the article of Sept. 24 by Maureen Azzato concerning the underachievement of black students in the Newton school system.

I agree with Supt. Strand's proposal to hire more black teachers. I take issue, however, with his plan to place these teachers "concentrated together in a limited number of schools" and to concentrate the number of schools METCO students attend. This would serve only to defeat the purpose of busing in the first place and perhaps prove detrimental to education as well. If more black students are placed in classrooms with unchanged teacher expectation, this will simply lead to more consignment to remedial classes. If all black students are in remedial classes, there will be no incentive provided either educationally by their teachers or socially by their peers to achieve academically. Black students are not falling through cracks in the school system; they're being pushed into corners, whether by chance or design.

Black teachers should be assigned throughout the school system just as black students are. Thus black and white students will benefit equally from the integration of the teaching staff as well; for are not white students with white teachers just as culturally isolated as black students with black teachers? Everyone involved would benefit from a truly integrated system.

Sincerely,
Wendy Ho Tai

NTA clarifies stand on issues

For the information of your readers, including the writer of a recently appearing letter, the Newton Taxpayers' Association has not voted for any position on public aid to private schools or any other current ballot question.

We do have a consensus in favor of a limit on the total increase of all taxation within the state. (Question 3 on the ballot.)

Additionally, our offspring, the Tax Limit Committee is petitioning to put a Newton tax reduction question on the ballot in the next (1987) city election.

Our president, Ronald L. Nuttall, and our other officers and directors may appropriately serve our healthy democracy by personally contributing to the full free and open discussion of any issue.

Sex, drug education should leave same message

By Larry Grady

After 20 years of the sexual revolution, that's a welcome insight arising from one divorced teachers'experience. There's uncertainty and distress in our times. Many who joined the sexual revolution of the 1960s are finding themselves lonely in the 1980s.

One wonders if this insight into "relationships" will be one of the critical facts of life taught in area high school sex education courses.

It's doubtful. It's not part of the conventional wisdom as yet.

It's little wonder, some say. Virtually every network TV soap opera portrays at least one couple jumping into bed per episode. Almost none are married. In a recent "made for teens" HBO movie, a high schooler hops into bed with a girl he just met and explains:

"We're just happy teenagers experimenting with sex."

For sex educators, there's a lot of talk about growth potential and personality development, but the real focus is "stopping teenage pregnancy." That's the drumbeat behind the ever-increasing demand for sex education. A study prepared for the Boston Public Schools advocates health clinics in high schools dispensing contraceptives. It's part of the "contraceptive mentality" package.

But what happens if the contraceptive sex educators succeed?

The truth is teen pregancy will decline. But there are other unforseen consequences for "relationships."

In my opinion, the sex educators' "non-judgmental" attitude toward "sexually active teens," means teaching that sex is merely another optional form of recreation. It's no problem, they say, so long as one takes the pill.

Ultimately, this will result in one more generation which considers sexual relations fulfilling one's personal gratification.

But consider what drives people apart. Selfishness. If sexual relations are for personal (selfish) gratification, partners in relationships sooner or later become little more than sex objects — an instrument of personal gratification.

Is it any wonder this contraceptive generation is heading for a divorce rate of almost one in two marriages? Commitment involves concern for the other's happiness. It involves sacrificng one's time and egotism to share another's needs and concerns.

As the headline indicated, even though two people think they have good sex, other areas of living and sharing ultimately are more important. For most, that sharing revolves around raising and educating children.

Sex alone can't make a relationship.

Anyone who is honest with his or herself knows that overcoming egotism and self-centeredness requires a daily effort. It takes self-discipline and self-control.

But the sex educators say one cannot counsel sexual restraint. "They (teens) are going to do it anyway." In other words, teen sexuality is out of control and they can only offer one solution — the pill.

Ersatz love through chemistry.

The reason sex educators have locked themselves into a one-solution box, is their insistence that in a pluralistic society public schools can't teach "values."

But what is the current emphasis on drug counseling if not teaching values? Those most prone to drug abuse are those either bored or undisciplined. They want immediate gratification. An immediate high.

Thus, we face the prospect of schools where on drug abuse teachers say, "Don't give into your impulses. Don't surrender to the desire for instant gratification. Don't become addicted. Take control of your lives. Live up to your human potential. Say no to drugs."

But on sex education, students are told its OK to give into your impulses — as long as you don't get pregnant. Give in to your sexual impluses, but don't get caught.

Sex educators are reluctant, even afraid, to admit the greatest contraceptive is to say "no."

Can young people survive a dual personality when it comes to impulses? Can they make a distinction between impulses for booze and sex? Can they use restraint on one, but not the other?

The non-judgmental "It's OK" sex educators are working against the drug abuse counselors who urge self-discipline and restraint.

So what's the solution for educating a "sexually active," drug-prone generation?

A decade ago in Waltham, a "sex education" movie was shown to an audience of parents with a wide range of values — liberal to conservative, religious to agnostic. Almost without exception they endorsed it. Some voiced minor objections to the venereal disease sores shown in living color; others said young people should see the results of promiscuous sexual activity.

The important thing was that the parents were brought in. It is just as important to educate them. They must focus on the situation and face up to their responsibilities. An elitist committee or core of professional sex educators is no substitute for parents being involved with their children.

The question of "values" must be addressed in a public school context. One solution would be to bring in speakers representing differing values in the community so students can listen to wisdom that is both contemporary and traditional.

The non-judgmental sex education alternative is nothing more than an endorsement of contraceptive, recreational sex. If that is what the sex educators want, let them be candid about it.

But let them also be realistic about the consequences.

'Family data' often masks a complex situation

By Ben Wattenberg

Because "family policy" is now one of the key issues, it might be useful to understand just how complex the situation really is. Here are some facts that are rarely thought about:

Consider the case of mothers who bear out-of-wedlock children. It's a real problem. But one of the best-kept demographic secrets is that nearly all mothers of out-of-wedlock children end up getting married!

Arthur Norton of the Population Division of the Bureau of the Census says: "Mothers of children born out of wedlock end up with a marriage rate only slightly lower than the population as a whole, which is about 90 percent."

In other words, many of those "illegitimate" children end up in whole families, at least for a while. That means that those children are likely to have more stability and permanence in their lives than we generally think.

Or consider the alleged disaster of "latchkey" children. Those are the kids whose parents are still working when the kids return home from school to an empty and allegedly lonely residence.

Sad.

Truly sad in some cases. Except that a study recently presented to the American Psychological Association reports that the children of working mothers scored higher on IQ tests, had better communication skills, scored higher in math and reading, and were more self-reliant than children whose mothers did not work! Mind you, it's still nice to have mom at home when a child returns from school, but apparently when that's not the case, the child can do quite nicely, thank you.

Or think about divorce. It's a real problem. It's true that about half of all first marriages will end in divorce. But what is not generally mentioned is that the divorce rate has stopped rising and about nine out of 10 divorced Americans get remarried. That's not exactly the portrait of a nation that's given up on marriage.

Moreover, it seems to me that the only thing worse than a very high divorce rate would be a very low divorce rate, as in many Third World countries. After all, a divorce is usually the joint and voluntary action of a husband and wife who have decided their lives together have become miserable. Typically, they both know in advance that it will be a rocky passage for them if they split. But still, as the numbers have shown us, the two partners become ex-partners. After a while, most of them get new partners. Some of them even live happily ever after. And some don't, but may try yet again.

It's not Norman Rockwell's America to be sure. But then again, there were a lot of very unhappy marriages in those days, where people didn't have a chance at a second chance.

Or think about this. It's said that the "extended family" is breaking down. But polls show that more than half of all Americans "spend a special evening with relatives at least several times a month." Other research confirms that "kinship ties" remain very important, and makes the point that the much-revered extended family of the "good old days" was — in large measure — a myth.

Or forget the past for a moment: A recent poll showed that marriage and children was included in the lifestyle of choice for 94 percent of American women.

In all, beware of data: It's very complicated!

Zoning solution to Needham St. traffic problem?

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The long cry for state action to ease traffic flow and make Needham Street safer has produced a rough timetable for two traffic lights and a "continuous turning lane."

But if the state is to invest in more dramatic and expensive solutions, the city must gain control of development there, said State Rep. Susan Schur, D-Newton.

"The city is going to have to get its zoning act together," said Schur, who as a Ward 5 alderman in 1973 began advocating for solutions to traffic woes in the Needham Street corridor.

The signals and turning lane are not cure-alls, but short-term improvements that the state Department of Public Works (DPW) could make now.

Ellen DiGeronimo, state DPW associate commissioner, said work on the estimated $275,000, state-funded project should begin as early as possible in the spring. She had no estimate on how long the work would take.

Since Needham Street is a state road, the city has no power to make changes or improvements on it. The street, called Highland Avenue in Needham, is jammed not only by shoppers and area employees, but by commuters heading for Route 9 and Route 128.

The signals will be installed where Oak and Christina streets and Winchester and Dedham streets intersect Needham Street.

The "continuous turning lane," which will be painted in the middle of Needham Street, should allow cars traveling in either direction to make left-hand turns without backing up traffic.

Because so many offices and stores line both sides of the Upper Falls roadway and there is little curbing, left-hand turns across traffic can occur almost anywhere.

During peak periods, the road handles almost 2,000 cars an hour. Since Needham Street has only two lanes, a car waiting to make a left often backs up traffic.

The turning lane will give drivers a place to wait for a gap in oncoming traffic as vehicles from behind pass on the right.

The two signals should create gaps in the traffic stream so cars can get from Upper Falls neighborhoods onto Needham Street in an orderly fashion, Schur said.

Under existing conditions, cars coming from Oak and Christina streets or from Winchester and Dedham streets have to edge forward cautiously, waiting for an opening.

"People cannot get out," said Teresa Walsh, president of the Charlemont-Winchester Street Association, which has fought for the signals. "You have to just keep on pushing out, hoping that someone will stop for you, give you a break," she said.

The signals may not ease Needham Street traffic congestion, but will at least allow elderly pedestrians to cross the street safely and drivers to get onto the roadway from side streets, she said.

Walsh said the failure of Newton and Needham zoning to control development is the root cause of Needham Street's traffic woes.

As an example, she said the line of trees along the Charles River used to be all one could see from the hills of the Charles River Golf Course to the south, but now a Needham office building rises above the wall of green.

Arts a priority in Newton schools

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — For Dr. John Michael Gray, music and the fine arts are an integral part of a well rounded education. Gray, the new coordinator of the music and fine arts department, described the Newton Public School system and its programs as "enviable."

Gray's priority for this school year is to familiarize himself with the system and to identify the strengths and weaknesses of his department. He is the first person brought into the system to develop a full fine arts program.

"Before the school had a director of music and another for art," he said. "My job will be to draw all programs together, including drama and dance, and integrate the arts into all aspects of the curriculum."

The fine arts coordinator position was vacated by John Campbell Harper who worked in the system for 16 years and recently retired.

For 11 years, Gray worked for the New Hampshire Department of Education where he also served as the fine arts consultant to the public schools. He holds a bachelor of fine arts from Cornell University, a masters degree in elementary education from Tufts University and a doctorate in administration and curriculum from Boston University.

The most refreshing aspect of his new job is that only about 50 percent of his time will spent doing administrative work.

"My job with the department of education involved a lot of government administration and curriculum development and improvement, but it was all from a certain distance," he said. "This job brings me closer to the action. I will be involved in the day to day operation which is something I welcome."

Gray said the system's fine arts programs are rich because of the strong staff and support from parents and the community who consider the arts important. Often, the curriculum is not taken seriously and can be perceived as recreational rather than educational. In Newton that is not the case, he said.

"Students learn in many different ways. The arts are simply a different mode of learning," Gray said. "It can be just as rigorous as many other subject classes and can in many cases be more stimulating and enriching than book learning."

Fine arts students use "a different sort of tool and a different part of the brain," he added.

Gray's objective in his new position is to look at the schools' arts programs to make sure there is "equity throughout the system," he said.

Declining enrollment and school closings have threatened the health and balance of the fine arts department in the past. The School Committee last spring sent out 19 notices to teachers for intent to dismiss, one-third of which went to teachers and support staff from the fine arts department.

Mann in anti-drug crusade

NEWTON — Education is the best possible solution to the growing problem of drug and alcohol abuse by the young, according to Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

Across the nation on Nov. 18 — dubbed "D-Day, Drug Awareness Day," — cities will be turned into "clearinghouses" of information on the dangers of substance abuse, Mann said at his weekly press conference.

Officials, educators and youth counsellors will use that day to formulate strategies to combat the national problem.

Then they will spread the news among the young "until the message is indelibly left in the their minds that there is no easy escape from the realities of life, that there are consequences" to substance abuse, Mann said.

In raising the issue for at least the second time during his press conferences, Mann countered criticism from the local press that another large, public relations campaign against substance abuse will not work.

The mayor insisted continued dialogue among officials, educators, counsellors and the young can bring victory in the fight against drugs and alcohol.

Jewels & Gems

BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

LINKING UP

Cufflinks first appeared in the nineteenth century when white shirts with long sleeves and starched cuffs were worn. They usually were fairly simple, made of silver, gold or ivory, and, sometimes, set with diamonds. There are several types of cufflink connections. The simplest is the ordinary chain. Expanding links, which allow the shirt-cuffs to be pushed up, have a length of chain coiled up inside the link-head. This uncoils to allow the distance between links to be widened by an inch or more. Another type of connection is the fixed metal bar to which one of the link-heads is soldered while the other is fixed on a swivel. It can be bent back to go through the buttonhole. Finally, some links fit together with press-studs.

Some items never seem to go out of style such as cufflinks. They can be in your drawer for years and still look as new as the day they were bought. At CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" we'll show you what a good investment a pair of cufflinks can be. They make a wonderful gift for a rising executive or a groom-to-be for his wedding day. Or if dad no longer wants his old pair they can be transformed into a stunning pair of earrings. Shop with us at 109 Dalby St., Newton and the possibilities are endless. Good news forseen from village study

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The news last January shook residents like a cold shower on a frosty winter morning. Connery Associates told them the Garden City's unique village character could be unalterably changed by 12.5 million square feet of commercial development.

The Winchester planning firm, hired last year to conduct the city's $191,000 Village Study, expects to deliver a more comforting message during its second tour of the city's 15 villages, which could begin late next month.

Robert Catineau, project manager for Connery, on Friday said his firm and the city's Economic Development Commission (EDC) will present each village with three growth alternatives.

"The key to all these alternatives would be substantially less growth allowed than under present zoning," he said.

The Village Study team will use these options to put together comprehensive recommendations for the city's development future.

The three alternatives — a "suburban business model," a "village mixed use" and a "village and community mix" — are not mutually exclusive. Connery could recommend each has a place in a different part of any village center.

The suburban business model would clearly demarcate areas for commercial or business use and for residential development, he said.

The second alternative would permit businesses and residences to share the same spots, Catineau said. "This option, we would try to design the zoning in such a way to encourage smaller shops, convenience shops," he said. "It would be relatively dense, similar to present zoning."

The third option, which he also called a "community-use zone," would encourage zoning for businesses that attract a citywide clientele, rather than the neighborhood customers drawn by a local drug store or a coffee shop.

"It's fair to say they would be of varying densities," said EDC Vice Chairman Mitchell Fischman of the three alteratives. "They would be based on different types of growth assumptions."

The alternatives and the potential for combining them in each village will allow "a number of different viewpoints" on how the centers should grow to be expressed, Fischman said.

The Village Study team last winter visited each village to present its vision of the future under present zoning and to hear residents' concerns. Between November and March, the team will listen again, this time so it can make its final recommendations next summer.

Two villages — Lower Falls and Oak Hill — will be handled somewhat differently than the rest, Catineau said.

Lower Falls already has an Urban Renewal Plan that residents support, Catineau said. And Oak Hill residents seemed satisfied with their own center as it stands, he said.

"Oak Hill is one of those cases of 'If it ain't broke, don't fix it,'" Catineau said.

The team will offer both villages some suggestions and listen to any last concerns, he said.

Even excluding those two, Connery is in the middle of a complex task. The planning firm already has had to test all three alternatives for each of the remaining 13 centers, Catineau said. And once residents and businessmen have made their views known, Connery will have to take another look at each center.

Further complicating the picture is the the work of the aldermanic Zoning Amendment Committee (ZAC), which is reviewing a proposed revision of city's zoning ordinances and will make recommendations to the full board.

The Zoning Review Committee (ZRC), composed of aldermen and residents, drafted that revision. Fears that large commercial development could destroy the quiet, intimate nature of the city's diverse village centers led the board to create the ZRC.

Experts share fields of study

NEWTON — Phyllis Philips, the new executive director of Newton Community Schools (NCS), says using the city's resources more efficiently will be one of her goals.

"We are looking to people in Newton who have other areas of expertise," she says. "The idea of grass roots local planning is a good idea to let people know who and what is around."

The 13-year-old Community School program, according to Philips, brings together volunteer teachers and paid instructors with thousands of city residents. Utilizing city facilities, she says nearly 10,000 people of all ages took part in the program last year.

The idea, she says, is to make the city's learning facilities available to more than just K-12 students.

This year, in addition to the cooking, arts and skills courses, Philips says the program will include classes taught by some members of the Board of Aldermen, including "Making Marmalade with the Master," taught by Alderman Rodney Barker.

Alderman Richard McGrath, an irrigation specialist, will teach "Installing automatic lawn sprinklers," and Alderman Verne Vance, an attorney by trade, will teach, "Controlling land use in Newton."

Neighbors trash landfill idea

Mansfield added that opposition to the plan could bring unexpected benefits.

"I think that all the opposition has the state taking a closer look at the site," he said. "I think it will speed up the process of determining what to do with Rumford Avenue if and when it is shut down."

Despite the long-range implications of the opposition, Bryson said neighbors are concerned with the problem at hand.

"A lot of these people are still angry about the burning that took place here last year after Hurricane Gloria," Bryson said. "They don't think the city knows what it is doing and they don't trust the city."

Gorgone agreed. "I think this is an awful situation," she said of the landfill. "We have enough bad stuff here already. We get the rotten end of everything in Newton and we feel that the composting should take place somewhere else."

Gorgone, whose family has lived in the area for 50 years, said those who live near Rumford Avenue do not want to see anymore problems.

"We have had rats, roaches and burning," she said. "There has been noise and traffic congestion from the trucks that dump there. It is time they put the stuff elsewhere. I think they should pave the dump over and build a park."

Gorgone is not alone. Mansfield said he received a petition with "more than 200 signatures, opposing the composting plan." Both Bryson and McGrath said the petition should serve as a message to the administration that the people of Auburndale and West Newton do not want an increase in activity at the dump.

Mansfield, however, presented detailed information about why Rumford Avenue is the most desirable site for composting.

"First, at Rumford Avenue, the nearest neighbor is about 300 yards away on Wabasso Avenue," he said. "A larger number of residents live about 500 yards away in the Capasso apartments on Lexington Avenue. At the city yard on Eliot Street, the nearest neighbor lives across the street about 50 feet away."

The second problem pointed out by Hickey, according to Mansfield, is that placing the composting program at Eliot Street would take up all the available space, leaving no room for expansion. In addition, it would require the removal of a large number of trees.

At Rumford Avenue, Mansfield said, Hickey's report shows "plenty of room.

"The site will be 1.75 acres with enough room for expansion."

Mansfield said while he is prepared to support the mayor's composting plan, he would like to see a greater emphasis placed on determining the future of the landfill.

"The real question is not the value of composting," he said. "The real question is to find out if there is any toxic waste buried at Rumford Avenue and what we will do to clean it up."

The composting plan must still be voted on by the Public Facilities Committee. A $12,000 allocation to implement the program was held in that committee, pending last week's community meeting and Hickey's report.

BC Gallery will host alumni artists' show

NEWTON — In honor of their 10th anniversary, the Boston College Gallery is presenting work by over 20 artists, most of whom graduated as studio majors at Boston College.

Titled "Alumni Exhibition: Ten Years," the paintings, drawings, watercolors, sculptures, prints and photographs will be on view from Oct. 15 until Nov. 25.

It is the first group showing of alumni work and intends to portray the strengths and seriousness of this relatively young program. Set up within the College of Arts and Sciences, it stresses both a liberal arts education and the demands of a vigorous professionalism in art. The exhibit is mostly the work of practicing artists, at least one of whom has already established a regional reputation.

The Boston College Gallery is located on the Newton Campus, 885 Centre St., between Newton Centre and Newton Corner. It is open Monday through Thursday from 1 until 4 p.m., and at other times by appointment. It will be closed on Nov. 11. There will be an opening reception on Wednesday, Oct. 15 from 4:30 until 6:30 p.m.

Retired persons club to meet Oct. 20

NEWTON — Newton Chapter 124 of the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) will hold its October meeting on Monday, Oct. 20, at the Horace Mann Senior Housing, corner of Brookside Avenue and Waterhouse Road, at 1 p.m.

Refreshments will be served at noon, followed by a business meeting and program.

All members are urged to attend.

Board okays development

would also be beneficial to neighbors used to shopping in such stores before the massive development of Newton Corner that displaced neighborhood stores.

Aldermen Verne Vance and Arthur Reilly both pointed out that Fahey could build offices without aldermanic permission if the board did not approve his petition. Their concern was verified earlier by Fahey representative Martin Tan, who said it was likely that the Texas-based builder would consider office construction.

Despite Marini's statements, fellow Ward 1 Alderman Bruce Carmichael argued the building is too dense for the area.

"This area is gone," he said of the former residential character of Newton Corner. "We've lost it. They may be able to build offices by right, but this area is already saturated. No one is rushing to rent office space at the Druker building, which is just up the street."

Carmichael unsuccessfully attempted to have his colleagues vote against Fahey's plan in an effort to reduce the strain on Newton Corner's traffic flow and area density.

Alderman Paul Coletti voted against the proposal in an effort to send a message to developers in his ward.

"Jack Antaramian is trying to intimidate the people in my ward by saying that his proposal for 122 units at the old bowling ball factory on Oak Street is not as intense as it could be," he said. "By voting against this petition, where I think the people are also being intimidated, I hope that people will vote against the Antaramian petition because it is too dense as well."

Despite its approval, the petition has a long way to go before construction will begin. Carmichael changed his vote against the petition in an effort to force another vote. By voting on the prevailing side of the issue, an alderman can call for a reconsideration of a previous vote.

Even if it does pass the board, the petition must be approved by Watertown officials, because the property lies in both municipalities. Watertown officials have given the plan preliminary approval but have yet to finalize that decision.

Tax law bites into B and Bs

"I laugh," she said. Bed and breakfasts are very successful, but "they only appeal to certain people who choose to travel that way."

They are not a business, she said. Instead, they are supplemental income.

For tax purposes, however, Durning sees little difference between a hotel and a bed and breakfast. "What is the difference between B and Bs and a small hotel/motel or a small cabin operation which has been paying taxes since day one? Some (B and Bs) ask for $70 or $80 a night. Maybe some in Newton are low cost. But others are really uppercrust."

He suggests that bed and breakfast operators use the pricing scale at local restaurants to figure meal costs and calculate taxes.

Columnist to speak on being a parent

NEWTON — Saf Lerman, nationally syndicated parenting columnist and author of "Responsive Parenting," will be leading a three evening workshop on parenting on Tuesdays, Oct.7, 14 and 21 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the Leventhal-Sidman Jewish Community Center, Gosman Campus, 33 Nahanton St., Newton Center.

Lerman teaches positive, practical, and creative approaches to bringing up children. Positive discipline, ages and stages of children's development, building children's self-esteem and independence, sibling relationships, and children's feelings are among the topics to be covered.

Group members will have the opportunity to bring up questions and concerns about their own children and parenting styles. There will also be discussions on the issues of parenting, how one's childhood influences the way one raises children, present family relationships and how one can improve them, what one appreciates about each child, and parental concerns.

There is limited enrollment and a fee. Call Anncharlene Dresner, 965-7410, ext.108, at the center to register.

Aldermen go head-to-head over salary issue meeting in which people are not engaged in a reasonable communication," he said.

"Alderman Bullwinkle is a highly insightful, intelligent alderman capable of being very effective. When he argues rationally, I find him persuasive," Irwin continued.

"When he loses his cool and argues emotionally, he has very little impact," Irwin said.

It was ironic that Bullwinkle took offense at his attempt to limit discussion, since it was aimed at Johnson and not his fellow alderman, Irwin said. Debate could have been resumed at the committee's next meeting, he said.

Bullwinkle left before the proceedings resumed, declining to comment on the way out. He simply extended his hand and said, "No."

Finance and Programs and Planning were meeting to hear presentations from Hay and the American Association of Industrial Management (AAIM), which are competing for the job of evaluating 50 to 55 of the city's top management positions.

Personnel Director Richard Moynihan on Sept. 10 asked Programs and Planning to approve $35,000 to hire Hay to write job descriptions of city department head and middle-management positions.

Hay also would rank the contribution each position makes to municipal government, creating a hierarchy that would allow the city over a period of time to address any salary inequities.

Moynihan stressed Hay would be evaluating positions, not the employees presently filling them. Bullwinkle said Hay's system may be too vague and he wondered whether it was possible to evaluate a job independent of the worker now performing it.

His questions in part led the committee to schedule last week's session so Hay and AAIM, which wrote job descriptions for the city's 24 department head positions in 1980, could make competing presentations.

Programs and Planning voted to recommend the city hire Hay while FinCom Chairman Paul Coletti decided to hold off action until his committee meets Oct. 14.

After the meeting, Coletti said the issue is important because the city cannot afford to lose department heads and middle managers if the municipal pay scale does not match that of industry.

At the same time, the city cannot hike salaries solely to compete with the private sector, he said. Top employees should be evaluated to determine salary hikes instead of simply being granted across-the-board yearly raises.

Bullwinkle's expertise in personnel makes his contributions on this issue especially important, he said. "This is right up Dick's alley," Coletti said. "I would just indicate its unfortunate Dick gets so upset sometimes he can't stay."

Coletti praised Irwin in general for his chairmanship of Programs and Planning, but said he may have been "presumptive" in attempting to limit last week's debate.

"You have to allow for an exchange of ideas," Coletti said. "You have to know when debate is important and when you can squeak by without debate."

Delayed traffic job to proceed at Newton Corner

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Aetna Life & Casualty has tentatively selected a general contractor to complete the much-delayed $1.2 million Newton Corner traffic-improvement project.

The announcement comes six weeks after the state Department of Public Works (DPW) dismissed the original contractor, Baker and Company of Stoughton, because it had fallen behind schedule. As Baker's bonding company, Aetna was charged with finding a new contractor.

A decade in the planning, the Newton Corner project was designed to ease traffic flow at the Washington Street/Massachusetts Turnpike-Exit 17 interchange.

A counselor for Aetna, who asked not to be identified, declined to name the new contractor until an agreement has been finalized. This could happen next week, he said.

"I will tell you a bidder has been selected," the counselor would only say.

He also declined to speculate on when the project would be finished. But he added, "It may be I can give you that in a week."

The federal government has funded most of the project under the Urban Systems Program and the state DPW was overseeing the work.

But once Baker was booted from the job, the bonding company became responsible, according to DPW spokesman Scott Pickard. "They are now technically on the hook," Pickard said of Aetna.

As much as six weeks of work remains to be done, according to city and state officials. In August, the state estimated only 60 percent of the job was complete, even though the original project deadline was October 1985.

City officials have stressed the need to finish before the winter halts this construction season. Icy roads could make driving in the area hazardous if conditions are not improved, they have said.

Traffic around Exit 17, the turnpike's only free on- and off-ramps, travels a labyrinth of streets circling the Howard Johnson's Hotel and heading towards Watertown, West Newton, Newton Centre, Brighton and Boston. City Traffic Engineer Roy LaMotte has said those roadways handle around 100,000 cars on peak days.

Synchronized traffic signals, painted lines to delineate traffic lanes and a final layer of asphalt are the key portions of the project to be completed.

It is impossible at this time for the state to estimate when work will be finished, Pickard said. The DPW's legal staff is now exploring the possibility that the state could seek damage payments from Aetna, he said.

"It's unclear at this point and we're looking into the situation," said Pickard. "It's definitely in their (Aetna's) best interests to get this project done as quickly as possible."

BC housing construction is stalled

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Boston College will not be able to build an addition to the Putnam House this school year, according to BC Community Affairs Director Laurence Barton.

BC is seeking approval of site plans for a 3,000 sq. ft. addition to Putnam House to house staff members of the Alumni Association. The addition, Barton said, was necessitated by the demolition of Alumni Hall on Commonwealth Avenue.

Amidst neighborhood concern over the encroachment of BC into Newton Centre, the Land Use Committee voted to hold the site plans. Barton said the delay means the school cannot begin construction until next spring.

One of the key neighborhood concerns is the proposed transfer of the Alumni Hall seven-day liquor license to the Newton Centre facility. Residents said they did not want the problems associated with a full-service bar in their neighborhood.

State Representative David Cohen (D-Newton) was on hand to support neighbors.

"This is sort of like a reverse domino effect," Cohen said. "Instead of knocking down the dominoes, BC is trying to lift up ugly dominoes one at a time."

Cohen said Newton Centre neighbors want to avoid the problems associated with the college faced by Chestnut Hill residents. Robert Finkelstein of 904 Centre St. said moving the Alumni Association to the Newton Centre law campus would only increase traffic, parking and density problems his neighborhood already faces.

Finkelstein and Alice Bailey of 103 Blake St. said many area residents opposed the license transfer. Bailey added that 66 neighbors signed a petition against the transfer.

In addition to the transfer, both Finkelstein and Bailey said the neighbors want BC to deal with the parking problems that exist on the Commonwealth Avenue campus before expanding the Newton Centre campus.

Jane Pitt, the attorney representing BC, said no complaints were registered against Alumni Hall during the 36 years it was located on Commonwealth Avenue. In addition, she said BC will pave over grass near Putnam House to allow for 15 extra parking spaces.

That did not placate Bailey. She said a tour of Putnam House Saturday showed the building will contain at least one function room with a 75-person capacity.

"There is no place to park on the campus right now," she said. "Where will all these other people park?"

The delay, Barton said, means that Alumni Assocation officials will have to work in cramped quarters for another year.

"We are not trying to build an open barroom," he said. "This will only be used for alumni functions and occasional events like weddings, christenings and bar mitzvahs. It will not be open to students. We will continue to work with the neighbors, but I don't think they see our side."

Real estate investment strategy with tax bill

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Last week we reviewed the logic of making a real estate investment prior to the date of enactment of the new tax bill.

Investors in real estate will receive 100 percent of previously permitted write-offs for tax year 1986.

Congress, in the proposed new tax bill, has done something few people thought it possible. Commencing in 1987 investors in real estate will be divided into two categories: active and passive. An "active investor" collects the rents and pays the bills. If you actively manage your own real estate investments, and your adjusted gross income does not exceed $100,000, the new tax provision will have little or no effect on your 1987, or subsequent tax returns.

However, if you are a "passive investor", by using a property management company to manage your real estate, or a limited partner in a real estate syndication, your write offs will fall within the "phase-in" rules that take effect in 1987.

In 1987 you may claim 65 percent of losses that exceed income; in 1988, 40 percent; in 1989, 20 percent; in 1990, 10 percent; in 1991, 0 percent.

The excess write-offs will not be lost, but may be carried forward to subsequent years to offset future income from these investments, and they may be lumped together with other real estate investments.

Long-term effects of this legislation on passive investors include:

•Because rents have always been a form of tax subsidy, rents will exceed the level projected in limited partnership offering memorandums. If owners no longer have tax benefits, then rents have no place to go but up.

•The disappearance of new apartment and office construction. Less supply should mean more demand, giving further credence to the notion that rents will escalate well beyond the Consumer Price Index.

•Potential investors are waiting for the final version of the tax bill before making any moves. They may be left out in the cold thanks to an amendment which makes the "effective date" for investments the date of enactment — not Jan. 1, 1987.

•Investment real estate has always been sold on the basis of "gross rent multiplier." As rents increase, so will selling prices.

•Real estate investment strategy was not formed to get rich overnight. Congress will be helping investors achieve their goal.

Investments made during this narrow window of opportunity will be grandfathered as to 19-year ACRS depreciation schedules. Future investments will carry 27½ to 31½-year schedules.

Newton North handcuffed by Raiders

By David Cuddy
Staff Writer

QUINCY — If Newton North was desperate going into Friday's contest with North Quincy, the Tigers were even more desperate at half time.

After gaining just 11 total first-half yards at Veterans Memorial Stadium, life didn't much easier for the winless Tigers, who lost their third straight game of the season, 12-6, to host North Quincy.

Newton North rebounded from a 12-0 intermisson deficit to cut the lead in half and seemingly switch the momentum early in the third quarter, but previously winless North Quincy had the mental edge back by the end of the quarter. From there, the Red Raiders coasted to secure their first win against two losses.

"Desperate" had been the key word going into Friday afternoon's game. Both clubs were struggling offensively and defensively. Both teams were coming back off big losses. But most importantly, both were without a victory.

Now Newton North is still without a win and, needless to say, things have been better for the Tigers and head coach Peter Capodilupo.

"We need to win," Capodilupo said. "Everything is harder when you lose. It's harder to go to practice, it's harder to scout, and it's harder to walk down the halls at school.

The game had started on an upnote for Newton North, with Milton Britton returning the opening kickoff 33 yards to midfield. But the Raider defense, which a week ago had yielded 33 points to third-seeded Arlington, stopped the Tigers cold on four straight downs.

North Quincy would do it again on the Tigers' second possession, set up at their own 40 by a Tony Filippone interception. After the Raiders threw quarterback Britton for a loss on third-and-five to force a punt, the North Quincy offense showed Newton North how it was done.

Sophomore fullback Ryan Craig gave Newton North its first scare on defense, breaking through off tackle for a 22-yard haul. The 185-pound Craig would run the same route all afternoon, reminding the Tigers of Brockton 10th grader Rudy Harris, who had rushed for a hard-earned 232 yards against them last week.

Craig wasn't near as good as Harris, but he was good enough. The sophomore ball carrier gained 159 yards on the ground and scored North Quincy's initial touchdown late in the first quarter.

"He was good," Capodilupo said of Craig, "but we made him look like a great fullback. I keep telling these kids that the reason football is different from baseball and basketball is because it's a contact sport. We're not hitting. We're playing like it was a non-contact sport."

A Steve Patch missed field goal from 24-yards back halted North Quincy on its first drive, but Craig took matters into his own hands on the second possession.

He vaulted through the lines and scurried 29 yards to the end zone, capping a 49-yard drive that ended with no time showing in the first quarter.

The second quarter was more of the same for the struggling Tigers, as 99 percent of the period's play took place in the Newton North zone.

A fumble by Britton on Newton's second play from scrimmage set the Raiders up at the Tiger 32, but an Al Clark stick of North Quincy quarterback Joe Mulvey on a fourth-and-long pass attempt thwarted the drive on the 15.

About the only thing Clark's drive-stopping hit did was postpone North Quincy's second touchdown, because the Tiger offense could do nothing against the Raider defense.

Even the bounces weren't going Newton's way. The teams swapped unsuccessful possessions, with North Quincy dropping a punt at the Tiger five-yard line thanks to a home-team bounce.

Three plays later the Tigers were backing into their own end zone, and even Brian Claflin 34-yard boot from the one-yard line didn't relieve the pressure.

Bill MacDougall returned the kick to the 15 and, four plays later, North Quincy hit paydirt for a 12-0 lead. Paul McCormack took the ball in from the three but, for the second straight time, Patch missed the kick on the point-after attempt.

The Tigers woke up, thanks in part to a 15-yard personal penalty against North Quincy on the extra point try. The Raiders were forced to kick off from the 25 and Britton returned the ball just inside the 50, marking the first time in the game Newton North had experienced life on the North Quincy side.

The Tigers took advantage, getting a strong rush from a hobbling Mark Adams and a big, third down sweep from Britton for Newton North's first first down of the game.

But the roof caved in. Scott Lennon, one of three quarterbacks used by Capodilupo on the day, missed on a pass attempt with Britton, then heaved his first of two interceptions on the afternoon to kill the Tiger drive inside the 30.

North Quincy took the 12-0 lead into the locker room while Capodilupo took his hapless-but-not-hopeless Tigers in for a pep talk. The harsh words worked wonders as Newton North took the play from North Quincy to start the second half.

Claflin blocked a Dave Lawless punt inside the North Quincy 35 after the Tigers had pushed the Raiders back on three straight plays, setting the Newton offense up at the 25.

Suddenly, things were happening for the Tigers, and Adams kept them happening with a 25-yard touchdown squirm on the first play from scrimmage. Evan Galanis' kick for the extra-point was blocked, but the Tigers had gained the momentum and pulled to within easy striking distance.

Newton North again stopped North Quincy quickly and without damage, then took off for the endzone and the tie ball game. But a penalty and a big defensive play by North Quincy ended the Tiger drive and switched the momentum back to the home side.

The penalty was a clip against Newton that nullified a Britton 11-yard rush while the big play was a John Rodophele tackle of Adams on a fourth-and-eight option pitch.

"It's the second time we've comeback and couldn't come through," Capodilupo said. The Tigers had fallen behind early against Watertown in the season opener but battled back, only to lose. "We get ourselves in these holes and we can't get out."

Mrs. Delaney joined Jack Lehane of Brockton and Robert Licare of North Andover as the newest inductees into the MBCA Hall of Fame.

Bourland's penalty kick decides

NORTH QUINCY — Steve Bourland slammed home a penalty kick midway through the first half and the Newton North defense survived a 10-minute North Quincy attack as the Tigers hung on to beat the Red Raiders, 1-0, Thursday.

Despite the pressure put on by North Quincy to close the game, Newton North held the edge in play. Steve Plotkin broke in alone on the Raider net 32 minutes into the game but was tripped from behind, setting up the Tiger penalty kick.

Bourland, second on the team in scoring behind Josh Albert (8 goals), beat the Raider netminder cleanly on the shot for his seventh goal of the season.

Newton North continued to carry the play but was unable to beat the North Quincy defense.

"They played a real defensive game," Newton North coach Roger Brown said of his opponents. "They waited for the opportunities, and at the end they took it right to us."

Tiger goalie Scott DeVoe was kicked in the throat 10 minutes into the second half and was replaced by Greg White, who saw his share of action in the final minutes.

If not for some strong defensive play by wings Matt Selig and Simon DeYoung, sweeper Bruce Anderson, and stopper back Zafar Kahn, the Tigers might have left Quincy with a tie.

"They really gave our defense a tough time," Brown said. "There was really no one shot that saved the game, but they put on continuous pressure. They really gave us a test."

Newton North, 3-0-2 in the league and 6-1-2 overall, will host Waltham on Wednesday in a crucial match.

Tie Brookline

Ken Kazarosian scored with eight minutes remaining and Greg White corraled a low, hard shot with just 20 seconds left to lift Newton North to a 1-1 tie with host Brookline Tuesday in a battle for first place in the Suburban League.

Both clubs entered Tuesday's contest locked in a tie for the top spot with 2-0-1 records. The teams are still tied, which suits Newton North coach Roger Brown just fine at this stage of the game.

"I think the tie was more of a big let down for them (Brookline)," he said. "We're feeling good about the tie. We're glad to get the point."

The Tigers had missed on some first-half opportunities — Steve Bourland was robbed on a corner kick while two directs from 20-yards out went wide — and they found themselves down, 1-0, at the half.

Doug Burkson caught the upper corner off a direct kick from 30-yards out at the 26:17 mark to put Brookline on top.

"It was well placed," Brown said of the Brookline goal. "It was a good shot that just caught the corner."

Brookline goalie Kevin Kleinfeld thwarted the Tiger attack for the remainder of the half and well into the second period before a tripping call set up a Newton North direct kick with eight minutes remaining.

Kazarosian hit a shot similar to Burkson's direct kick in the first half, and the ball sailed over the wall of Brookline defenders and past Kleinfeld for the equalizer.

"Ken really nailed it," Brown said. "It looked like the goalie might have misjudged the speed of the ball."

Brown credited Matt Scales with turning the tide for Newton North. Scales put a couple of tough shots on Kleinfeld just before the Tigers scored.

White sealed the victory with time running out as he came out to challenge Burkson on a shot headed for the far side. The Newton netmider smothered the low stop and saved the day.

South misses

Sean Carey and Bob Bens scored second-half goals, adding to a 1-0 advantage, as visiting Concord-Carlisle blanked Newton South, 3-0, in DCL play.

Carey connected on a direct kick 15 minutes into the second half to put Concord up, 2-0, and Bens beat South goalie Seth Kugel on a breakaway late in the game.

South is 0-6-2 overall and 0-4-2 in the Dual County League.

McBride guides Lions

BOSTON — Kathy McBride collected the hat trick and Amy Monihan scored two goals as the Newton South booters ripped host Boston Latin Thursday, 10-0, in a Dual County League massacre.

The victory evens South's record at 3-3 with a big contest against Lincoln-Sudbury next on the docket. The Lions will host the top-ranked Warriors on Wednesday at 3:30 p.m.

Newton South scored early and often against a retreating Latin squad. It took the Lions four minutes to back the Wolfpack into their own zone, then another 37 seconds before breaking open the scoring.

At 4:37, Monihan scored her first goal of the afternoon, a chip shot from 25 yards out that just cleared the Latin goalie before tucking in underneath the crossbar.

Jill Goldberg set up the play, firing the ball inside the Latin 18-yard line. The shot was trapped and cleared, but McBride stopped the attempted clear and pushed it back to Monihan at the 25.

North ties

Newton North put 43 shots on net but tough luck had it in for the Tigers as visiting Cambridge, Rindge & Latin walked out with a 0-0 tie in a hotly contested Suburban League battle.

Newton North has still not given up a goal, but the tie is the first setback for the Tigers, who had run off seven straight wins.

Clark hat trick leads Newton AA

NATICK — John Clark picked up three goals in Newton's 5-3 victory over Natick in Pee Wee AA ice hockey action at West Suburban Arena in Natick recently. Clark tied the ballgame and broke two ties with his three goals.

After the second period ended in a 1-1 tie, goalie Mark Capello shut down Natick in a well played game. Marco Gentile's wrist shot hit home for the first goal for Newton, assisting were Chris Hamilton and Clark. Clark completed his hat trick with 1:27 left, aided by Gentile and Scott Robinson.

Kreider's stick sparks North

NEWTON — Linda Kreider scored a goal and assisted on another to lead the Newton North Tigers to a 3-1 victory over host and city rival, Newton South, Tuesday.

Kreider scored the first goal of the match from a crowd in front of the net. The Tigers repeated what worked when Christine Marchant stabbed at the ball during a struggle in front of the net to up the Tigers' lead to two.

Sheila Wilcox scored the only goal for the Lions off a scramble in front of the Tigers' net. Wilcox was covering the far-side post and poked the ball past the goalie for the score at 20 minutes into the first half. The score held at 2-1 through the rest of the half.

Stars for North include Renee Richards who centered the ball from the right wing all during the game. Liza Moore's control of the midfield was important in South's demise.

Sophomore Jackie Synder and Gabby Stevens both had strong defensive games at half-back for South and Beth Broome anchored the center position on the offense.

Weston blanks Tigers

Liza Danfort started the cogs turning when she gathered a pass from Jen Epstein on the left side and flicked the ball waist-high past Tiger goalkeeper Felicia Moschella.

Fifteen minutes later Kathy Stichweh tallied goal number two. Teammate Liz Pearman controlled a corner hit, slipping a pass through the crowd to Stichweh who was charging the net. Stichweh tapped the ball on the run into the corner of the net.

Newton South notches 1st win

By Tom Gaudet

ROXBURY — Newton South gridsters were hoping to do two things they had been unable to do in their first two contests when they took the field at Madison Park Friday afternoon: 1) score points and 2) win a ballgame.

They managed to accomplish both against the Cardinals (1-2), unveiling their own version of the "four horsemen" in the process, while handing Madison Park a methodical 18-12 defeat.

Less-than-perfect conditions made a strong running game the order of the day, and South responded by collecting 227 yards worth of real estate while limiting their opponents to a paltry 76 yards on the ground.

Lion head coach Art Kojoyian had little difficulty in assessing the keys to his team's first victory. "We played together as a team today...as a whole", he explained, and the statistical domination of South clearly backed up the statement.

In fact, only some dubious officiating kept the Lions from increasing the margin of victory.

It appeared Newton South would have to wait for their first points of the season when they were shut down on four plays on the game's first possesion, but that was not to be the case.

Madison Park fumbled Ben Burlingame's punt and end John Hillis pounced on it at the Cardinal 36 to keep the Lion drive alive, and Newton's balanced running attack worked it in from there. Leroy Browne (51 yards rushing) took the honors, driving in from the two, as South enjoyed its first lead of the year at 6-0.

It began to look as if the lead would be shortlived, however, as the Cardinals Terry Cousin (63 yards) started to put on a running clinic of his own. A pass interference penalty didn't hurt the drive either, but fate was about to intervene on South's behalf once again.

Madison Park halfback Earl Askew coughed up the ball on the Lions' 29 to simultaneously end the threat and the quarter and preserve the lead.

The Lions' turf express went full steam ahead on the next series, with the four-pronged running attack successfully negotiating yardage until the drive fizzled out at the 20.

The Cards went nowhere after receiving the punt, and as they prepared to punt away Lady Luck was on South's side once more, as punter Robert Cardosa fumbled the slippery snap and Newton South recovered.

It took the Lions all of three plays to negotiate the seven yards to the end zone, with Rama Malone (33 yards) bursting through from the two to double the cushion.

The Cardinals answered immediately with a score of their own, with some helpful officiating along the way. The big play of the drive was a personal foul penalty levied against South as Cardinal QB Chester Robinson heaved an incomplete fourth-and-10 toss that would have given possession back to the Lions. The call sent the Newton sideline into a rage and kept the Madison Park offense on the field, where, naturally, they capitalized. On the last play of the half a 13-yard strike from QB Chester Robinson to Chris Patterson chopped the lead in half at 12-6, and South went to the locker room knowing they had played better than the score indicated.

The Lions were upset, and they vented their frustrations on the Cardinal defense on the first drive of the third quarter. As Kojoyian shuttled his backs in and out, each responded with positive yardage, and one sensed that the Lions were not to be denied.

T.J. Rohne drove the final nail into the Cardinals' coffin as he broke off tackle and breezed in from the 24 to put South back on top by two scores at 18-6.

A pesky Cardinal squad punched in another six points later on, but the determined Lions weren't about to let this game slip away, as they shut down Madison Park the rest of the way in running their record to 1-2.

Coach Kojoyian was happy to finally get one in the win column, and he knew it would not have been possible without the contributions of his talented backs. "Oh yeah," he agreed, "all our backs ran really well."

He feels his squad has "definitely improved" in its first few games, which had better be the case for the Lions. Things don't get any easier next time out as South tangles with Boston Latin next Saturday at Winkler Field. The Intown school has always been a tough nut for the Lions to crack and has another strong outfit, sporting a 2-1 record at the writing. Boston Latin blanked Hingham, 14-0, in its opener.

Newton Yellow Cab to hold AAU hoop tryouts

NEWTON — The summer concluded on a particularly high note for the Newton Yellow Cab Basketball Program.

The Cab's 15 and Under Boys AAU team emerged as the New England champions, earning the right to compete in the National Tournament in Orlando, Fla. The team was sparked by Scott Taylor of Newton South High in its impressive win over defending NE champion Shoot Straight AAU of Cambridge.

The 15 and Under team is one of six age group development programs that are sponsored by Richard Johnston, owner of Newton Yellow Cab. These basketball programs are open to boys and girls of Norfolk and Middlesex County.

In 1984, the Cab's 14 and Under girls' team was crowned New England champion and came within one game of advancing to the National Championship round. Many players have gone on to greater basketball accomplishments, including Mark Plansky who played on the 1985 NCSS Championship Villanova quintet.

The development program begins each October. This year's opening tryouts take place on Oct. 4 at Pine Manor College. This tryout will be open to girls only. Registration is three dollars and includes insurance. Tryout times are: 14 and under, 10 a.m.; 16 and under, noon; 18 and under, 2 p.m.

The program is under the direction of Ron Spinney, former Massachusetts High School Coach of the Year, now coaching at Winthrop. Several outstanding high school coaches volunteer their services to the program, including Bernie Plansky of Wakefield, Ellen Cucino of Newton North and Allison Toney of Brookline. Players interested in joining the program should make plans to attend the tryout, or call Coach Spinney at 846-3372.

All players will be eligible to play in the Newton Yellow Cab Club Tournament to be held Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 25 and 26, at Pine Manor College. Players in each age level will divided equally by talent and compete in a round robin tournament.

The all star traveling team will be announced on Oct. 16. The 18 and under team will compete in the "Women of Excellence" Tournament on Nov. 15 and 16 at Pine Manor College. This second annual event will feature the top high school basketball players in New England. All players will be representing various AAU clubs.

The AAU interest has risen dramatically since the birth of a home club in the Norfolk/Middlesex area. This is in no small part due to the volunteer services of the coachng staff, the interest of parents, the eagerness to learn of each player and the generosity of Mr. Johnston and Pine Manor College.

So, off to another year. Don't let time run out on you. Come on out and support the AAU program with your efforts as a player, coach, spectator or sponsor.

All inquiries about Newton Yellow Cab Basketball Programs may be made to NYC AAU Director Tom McCarthy at 731-7548.

Kornitzer sets pace for Lions

BROOKLINE — Magda Kornitzer, freshmen Sarah Morse and Suzanne Mosher captured the top three spots in Newton North girls' cross country team's victory over Brookline, 18-39.

Kornitzer clocked a 15:07 while blazing through the 2.5 mile course at Brookline. Morse frustrated Brookline's number one runner, Megan McCarthy, so much that McCarthy dropped out of the race giving . Morse finished with a time of 16:01.

Silverstein lifts South

Newton South's Mike Silverstein clocked in at 14:54 to key a 24-32 victory over Boston Latin Tuesday at the 2.7 mile course at Cool Spring Park.

Coach Paul McCarthy said, "Silverstein's win was really great but what made the difference between winning and losing was Mark Fraiolo and Robert Weiner coming in seven and eight."

Sullivan, Rodgers spur North

NEWTON — Christine Sullivan and Wendy Rodgers each with their outstanding offensive play keyed the Newton North Tigers to a 15-2, 16-14, victory over the visiting Waltham Hawks.

Both teams had players that returned after missing a few weeks due to injury. Laura Slamin came off the bench for the Tigers and served up several aces to add to the Tigers offensive bite.

Karen Conti returned for the Hawks and gave a solid preformance after a wrist injury suffered during a match with Cambridge, Rindge & Latin.

In the first game Newton North sped out in front as Waltham was slow and timid going for the ball. The second game saw the Hawks fly to an early 7-0 lead before the Tigers fought their way back into the ballgame with some power serving.

Stars for Waltham include co-captain Lana Jurigian who had eight points serving and Dina Pallone contributed defensively with some incredible blocking.

Lancers winb1

New starters, Sioehon Welsh and Dawn Foley, gave the Newton Catholic Lancers the help they would need in sweeping Sacred Heart High School, 15-4 and 15-5.

Welsh served the last six points of the final game while Foley also chalked up five points serving. Setters Linda Leary and Angela Canty were Newton Catholic's standouts in the back.

A perfect example of the Victorian style that was popular in the early 19th century is in this Newton home.

The American Way

By Country Home
A Meredith Magazine

America in the 19th century was undergoing profound cultural changes. The rural character of the American landscape was giving way to a puffing, urban, industrial nation of great new wealth and ambition, an affluence that came to be symbolized by the ornate facades and complex masses of Victorian residential architecture.

By the late 1800s, many people considered Victorian architecture too eclectic and too laden with excesses, according to Country Home. Inspiration for Victorian design had come from any source that could be tapped, and stylistic details were freely mixed: Egyptian reed patterns, Oriental symbols, and French rococo might be combined in a single building.

House shapes were intentionally complex, including dramatically curved porches, towers and bays brought together in asymmetrical, irregular forms.

But the desire for visual complexity was increasingly viewed as a sign of decadence rather than success, and Americans began looking at the healthy, wholesome shapes of the "good ol' days" as models for the construction of their residences.

By the turn of the century, new ideals would change the way Americans designed their homes. Patriotism and blossoming pride in what was considered the true American culture — colonial arts and architecture — rapidly swept the country and remained popular through the first 30 years of this century. Simplicity and straightforwardness became the American ideal, and newly built homes reflected these desires in a general architectural movement known as the Colonial Revival period.

Ceramic creatures: A collector's dream

By House Beautiful
A Hearst Magazine

Animal lovers can own anything from a water buffalo to a pussycat — if it is one of the porcelain or pottery animals that are among today's favorite collectibles.

Ceramic creatures include dogs, cats, lambs, lions, zebras, elephants, water buffalo and almost any other animal imaginable, according to an article in the October issue of House Beautiful, and they may secrete anything from tea to trinkets — or sometimes are just decorative objects to enliven a bookshelf or tabletop.

The Chinese secret of porcelain was discovered in the west about 1708 at the Meissen works in Saxony, near Dresden. In the 1730s Meissen sculptor Johann Kandler modeled life-size porcelain animals for Augustus the Strong, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland. Soon, smaller figures were being made throughout Europe.

In England, aristocrats developed a passion for porcelain, and English potters began producing ceramic animals.

European makers produced animal figures that ranged from salt-glazed stoneware bear jugs and camel teapots to porcelain rams and ewes, while the English artisans at Chelsea, in a playful spirit, made such items as rabbit-shaped dessert dishes.

Most fine 18th-century figures are in museums and private collections. Today's collector must look to the work from 1850 into the early 1900s. Some are crudely modeled pottery figures — others are desirable copies of fine early porcelain in examples from eminent factories, still obtainable for under $200.

Porcelain and pottery cats are among the most avidly collected animals, as are Kutani and other Oriental varieties. Some collectors seek only one species — only elephants, or Chinese lions, or sporting dogs such as greyhounds and foxhounds or Staffordshire "comforters," a cross between a maltese and a King Charles spaniel.

Serious collecting of old Staffordshire animals requires expertise and reliance upon a dealer specializing in the field. Reproductions abound, sometimes with blatant staining and crazing to make them look old.

There are also some new Staffordshire figures made from old molds, sold as reproductions for prices ranging from $30 to $50, depending on size.

Before you begin collecting in earnest, try to learn as much as you can about porcelain and pottery. Visit museums with large labeled exhibits. Obtain a book of porcelain and pottery marks. Many ceramists used marks, often different ones in different periods, which can help identify and judge the age of an item.

It pays to know that ceramics imported to the United States after 1891 bear the name of country of origin, and that the words "made in" were added in the early 1900s.

Visit antique shows to get a "feel" for new and old. Dealers specializing in porcelain and pottery can help you start a collection. Ceramic animals can be found at auctions, antique shops and shows, and estate sales.

And as with real animals, you may be beguiled into buying an irresistbly appealing animal — despite its unknown porcelain or pottery pedigree.

Beauty lies in fresh cut flowers

By The Associated Press

Fresh flowers lovingly arranged are always a wonderful addition to the home. But when the arrangements are appropriate to the decor, they can also accentuate the impression you are trying to create.

Miss Barnhardt says that good period arrangements depend on the appropriate container, the use of flowers that would have been available during the period in question and a historically accurate form for the floral bouquet.

Since Biltmore, a large formal estate, was completed and lived in at the beginning of the 20th century, she concentrates on filling its great vases and urns with late Victorian formal bouquets.

She has the benefits of large cutting gardens at Biltmore from which most of the fresh flowers come and containers have been acquired over the years.

Miss Barnhardt says that styles changed over the Victorian period. At first, there were all sorts of formal rules, a great deal of symmetry in bouquets that consisted of very tightly massed flowers. Arrangements were elaborate, compact and stiff.

As time went on, people rebelled against all the rules and bouquets began to take on a softer look with more trailing and cascading materials. Typical flowers of the period included tulips, carnations, roses, peonies, azaleas, gladiolus, snapdragons and stock.

Victorians were also fascinated by tropical plants, such as the showy bird of paradise, and by palms of all sorts and dried grasses.

Although the Biltmore arrangements are of the late Victorian period and beyond, Miss Barnhardt also provided some tips for those whose decor dates back to the early 19th century or before.

She noted that American floral and decorating styles came largely from England, at least along the east coast. Colonial bouquets were loose and informal and included many wildflowers, since busy colonial women didn't have much time to cultivate floral cutting gardens.

As the 18th century advanced and turned into the 19th century, a more formal and symmetrical arrangement developed. Flowers were not placed on the dining table until Victorian times. In earlier times, they would have been on a sideboard or mantle.

Miss Barnhardt recommends that those interested in period arrangements check through decorating books for examples of arrangements. She has found the book "A History of Flowers," by Julia Berrall very helpful in her own work.

For more modern arrangements, Tricia Guild's new book, "Designing with Flowers," has advice on creating modern bouquets. Miss Guild says that going through a series of steps leads to pretty bouquets. She believes in letting your eyes guide you in matching flowers with container.

Once you are satisfied that container and flowers will go well together, allow the flowers to soak in cool water to condition them while you create the framework of the arrangement with leaves. Begin at the outer corners and work toward the center.

She suggests intertwining thick-stemmed and thin-stemmed branches so that the former can support the latter. After the spine of the arrangement is satisfactory, fill in with the flowers, making sure to stop short of overkill.

In the final analysis, both Miss Barnhardt and Miss Guild agree that fresh flowers, so beautiful in themselves, always add a positive note to the decor. So, they say, don't fret too much about arranging them; just enjoy them.

Childproofing your home

By David Hendin

Your home may be a deathtrap for your children. Accidents kill more children between the ages of 1 and 14 than any disease.

In 1980 alone, accidents killed more than 8,300 in this age group, and about 40 percent of the accidents occurred at home. By far the most common deaths are associated with fires, followed by falls, firearms and poisons. If there are dangers in and around your home, and you do not take the time to correct them, you may be endangering your child's life.

It is equally important for you to know how to treat accidental injuries if they do occur. No matter how carefully you "accident-proof" your home, or how carefully you watch your children, they are bound to be out of your sight just long enough for an accident to occur.

Here are things you must correct if you wish to cut the chances of accidents involving children in your home.

Be certain that all of your rugs and carpets are secured. Are there frayed or loose edges that can cause falls?

Repair falling paint or plaster. Falling plaster can cause concussions in small children, and they may choke on bits of it.

Make sure your television set is well ventilated, for it can get very hot and catch fire.

You should have guardrails across any windows that a child might be able to reach, as well as guard gates in front of any steps or drop-offs where a child might venture.

Do not use thin plastic film or plastic cleaners' bags to cover furniture.

Are there any exposed radiators or steam pipes in reach of a child? If so, they should be covered with insulation.

While cooking, keep your pan and pot handles turned away from the front of the range. A child could easily reach up to the stove and pour boiling liquids all over his or her body.

Store matches in a fireproof container that you keep out of children's reach.

Keep knives, scissors and other dangerous utensils in places where your child cannot reach them.

In the bathroom, are all radios and other electrical appliances out of the reach of any person in the tub?

Remove glass bottles or jars from the top of the toilet tank and from in and around the tub.

Never leave razors — electric or safety — lying around.

When you give a baby or small child a bath, never leave the child so you can answer the phone or doorbell, or for any other reason. Your child could drown quickly in as little as 1 inch of water.

In the nursery, don't buy a crib with the side slats too far apart. Your child could get his or her head caught between them and be strangled.

Always use non-toxic paint to paint a child's room and furniture.

Never leave a baby unattended on a bassinet or table.

The attic, basement, garage and shed are the most dangerous areas of your home, and should be off-limits for your small children. You should also follow these precautions:

Always store rakes, hoes, and shovels with the blades down, or hang them on the wall with the sharp sides facing inward. Ropes, cords and hoses must be out of reach.

Colors change the mood of your home

By The Associated Press

It may just be imagination, but psychologists say the color of your walls can have an effect on the way your home feels. So if you're about to repaint or rewallpaper a room, it might help to keep some rules in mind.

Colors such as blues and greens, known as the "cool colors," will make a room feel more comfortable in the summertime, according to this theory, while "warm," colors such as reds, pinks and oranges will make a room feel warmer in winter.

In addition to changing the color of the walls, complete the color scheme by coordinating the room's floor and window coverings and furnishings in the same color family, advise experts at Trane Dealer Products Group, manufacturers of heating and air conditioning products.

Other suggestions include:

— To implement the "cool" color strategy without entirely redecorating a room, use accessories. Pillows, throws or slipcovers for chairs and sofas, in a blue or green tone that coordinates with other colors used in the room can be used seasonally.

— The ideal color strategy would combine the use of neutral tones such as white, ivory or beige on permanent features in a room with seasonal accessories in both the "warm" and "cool" colors.

To remodel or not to remodel

By Cyra McFadden
San Francisco Examiner

Wandering into a realtor's open house on Sunday, my husband and I found the Victorian of our dreams. Larger and grander than our present house, by far, it also suffers from what the spec sheet delicately calls "deferred maintenance."

In other words, it's falling down. We can't afford it to begin with, much less spend five years and $100,000 making it livable. In my fantasy life, where I have nothing but time and money, I bought it anyway and remodeled it.

Now it's a showplace. How grateful I am to the mythical grandmother who left me a trust fund, and to the veteran remodelers among my friends. They let me know what to expect: one nasty surprise after another, money flowing like arterial blood and about the time the job is completed, a divorce.

Back on the market, our gem "shows" beautifully. The stairs aren't covered with peeling purple paint anymore, after our weekends with scrapers and blowtorches. The banister doesn't come off in your hand. That awful red flocked wallpaper is gone, and so is the chartreuse bathroom. We tackled these things as soon as the electrician finished rewiring, right after that fire in the attic.

Because the banister was a heart-stopper, no one was upstairs at the time. We still recall standing in the street that night, watching the firefighters, and hadn't counted on spending all those thousands. The electrician now lives in the south of France, but it's comforting that when we turn the furnace on, we no longer hear muffled explosions.

Even more satisfying is that priceless San Francisco amenity, our garage. It cost as much as most houses cost anywhere else. We had to tunnel into a hillside to build it, and the hillside turned out to be solid rock. Still, you can park a motorcycle in it, if you strip off the rear-view mirrors.

When the drillers began drilling, the first floor plunged into the basement. Part of it's still there. We had harsh words over who insisted on having a garage in the first place. In retrospect, this wasn't half as bad as the black day the chimney fell off.

We're still on chilly terms with our neighbors. They have two other children but seem to have been fond of the one who got hit by the chimney. Although we left a bottle of champagne on their doorstep, the instant the lawsuit was settled, they never wrote us a thank-you note.

Nor would they let us shower at their house, when we discovered we had no indoor plumbing. Sheer spite. They must be sorry now that we've installed our hot tub.

The tub occupies the space in the yard where the gazebo collapsed. More mutual recriminations — "Whose idea was it to buy this dump?" — but we rallied and turned it into a plus. Same for the gas leak.

Starting with one canary, we ended up with an aviary full of birds, which we send into empty rooms to check for more gas leaks. Their song brightens our days, their courage inspires us and Architectural Digest called them "a grace note."

We couldn't live without them. True, too, of my Virginia Woolf-like room of one's own. I fell in love with it at that open house; mentally lined up my books on the shelves; positioned my desk facing away from the window, so that the view couldn't distract me, and plugged in my word processor.

Unfortunately, the new wiring couldn't take it. Prepared for almost anything, we weren't prepared for life in total darkness. With the word processor converted into a planter box, I raise geese to supply myself with quill pens.

A washer does not need to be big or elaborate to get the job done. Simple washers can be the best buy.

A simple washer is often the better buy

By the Editors
of Consumer Reports

It used to be that washing machines differed considerably in their ability to clean laundry. But times have changed, and most brands do that job well. So how do you decide which model to buy?

According to the engineers at Consumer Reports, you should base your decision in large part on a model's type, features and efficiency. First, decide which basic style you want.

Top-loaders generally can handle larger loads. Front-loaders use less water per pound of laundry, which makes them cheaper to operate. Since they load from the front, the top surface can be used as a work area. If space is a problem, consider stackables, which come separately or as part of a unit that includes a dryer. Some are small enough to fit in a closet.

Don't be lured by fancy, state-of-the-art controls. The engineers say electronic touch-pads sometimes give you less flexibility and fewer choices than the old familiar dials. And the standard three washing cycles — regular, permanent-press and delicate — may be sufficient. It isn't necessary to pay extra for five cycles.

Some speed options are listed by fabric, a convenient feature if you're unsure about which speed to use. In general, a slow agitation speed is good for delicate fabrics; a slow spin can minimize wrinkling if you line-dry permanent-press items.

As for temperature options, you need only the basic three — a hot, warm or cold wash, each followed by a cold rinse. Don't bother with a warm rinse to follow a hot or warm wash. It's

Color matching easier with computer system

The continued and growing importance of color in our daily lives has led to the development of a computerized color matching system for in store use at local paint stores, and Babel's Paint & Wallpaper in Norwood is one of the first store's in the area to offer this service.

This system was developed by Benjamin Moore & Co. over a seven year period, to provided the means whereby its dealers could meet the demands of consumer, contractor, architect, and decorator with a quick and accurate solution to their color problems. The system is particularly suited to those whose color needs go beyond the 1,600 colors available in the well established Moore-O-Matic Custom Color System, and industry standard.

Known as Moore's Computer Color Custom System, it combines the science of computers, paints and colors in analyzing samples to be color matched to as small as one quarter of an inch.

After the system fully analyzes the sample to be color matched, it develops a detailed prescription telling the dealer exactly how to reproduce the custom color (the system works on Benjamin Moore product bases). The entire process, from sample introduction to printed prescription, takes less than one minute. Experienced dealers/operators can derive a prescription in seconds.

Make your windows work for you

By Barbara Aston-Wash
Scripps Howard News Service

Looking at the world can be expensive — not just out the window of a plane or porthole of a ship, but from the windows of your own home.

Heat transfer through windows accounts for 15 to 35 percent of the utility bills that batter our budgets, according to statistics gathered by the Electrical Women's Roundtable, an organization of women in the electrical industry and allied fields, for a booklet they have compiled on the subject.

Keeping the house cool when the temperature's registering in the 90s and holding, or maintaining a toasty homestead while the mercury hovers below zero, a condition we may soon be facing, is no easy matter. It can be very costly, too.

To know what would work best at your house, you need to answer a number of questions for yourself.

Would it be more advantageous:

— To replace the windows with new insulating glass?

— Refit your present windows with bonding materials?

— Improve conventional window treatments — draperies, shades, shutters, window blankets?

The bank account, time, and the inconvenience you're willing to endure may be determining factors. The EWRT suggests a number of ways.

To do so they suggest caulking all permanent joints, both on the inside and outside of a room; weatherstripping wherever two movable edges come together and adding storm windows.

Making window treatment (draperies, blinds, etc.) more heat protective is an excellent route to consider if you are on a budget, but one should not ignore the prime functions of a window — the light, ventilation and view.

The appearance, ease of installation and operation of the window treatment are important as well. If the windows treatment is not visually attractive and if the energy-savers are a great bother to open and close, you won't be happy with your choice.

A simple, lined drapery of tightly-woven fabrics is easily the most popular window treatment used. The substitution of a liner, backed with silver, foam or vinyl in a light color could increase its efficiency.

Sheer, unlined and open-weave draperies used alone let in light and offer some privacy but are not energy saving. However, paired with lined draperies and sealed at bottom, center and sides to stop air circulation, they can be quite energy efficient. Tacks, snaps, magnetic tape and Velcro can be used for sealing the drapery.

Window blankets — draperies that are quilted and insulated — are effective but may not be an aesthetically pleasing solution.

Cornices (a closed box-like apron top made of wood) or a lambrequin (like a cornice that goes around three sides of the window) are also good insulators.

Shutters with movable louvers basically control only air circulation, but shutters with fabric inserts can be energy effective when tightly fitted. Weather stripping adds to their efficiency.

Roller shades in vinyl and fabric and Roman shades of tightly woven material are energy savers, too. They are most helpful with inside mounts and magnetic tape to seal edges and are especially good used behind draperies.

Venetian and vertical blinds have limited efficiency in winter as they permit too much air flow when open.

Solar film is another choice that pays off in summer. The film, a see-through insulation that can be applied to glass, is effective in reducing heat gain. Applied to a double-glazed glass, it reportedly exceeds the effect of a triple-glazed window with a quarter-inch of air space and is effective in stopping sunlight fading of carpeting, drapery and furniture as well. Q. - Our bathtub has a shower in it. We use a portable hanger to let clothing drip dry into the tub. The other day a sweater was being removed from the hanger, which is metal, and the hanger fell and hit the soap dish imbedded in the ceramic tile alongside the bathtub. A piece of the dish grab bar broke off. I would like to glue it back rather than try to set in a new soap dish. Is there some special kind of adhesive that must be used?

A. - Epoxy cement should do the job, although some other kind can be used if it is waterproof. When the cement has been applied and the broken piece put into place, hold it there for a day or two with some tape until the cement is thoroughly dry.

Q. - I read your recent article about the proper way to build a fire in a fireplace, but I didn't find anything about the problem we have every so often. Most of the time, the fires starts and goes along without any trouble, but every so often the fire smokes more than usual. Is there some reason for this? We use wood from cut trees on our property.

A. - If you do everything the same way every time, then the only difference would appear to be the kind of wood being used. It may be that occasionally you are using wood which is not thoroughly dry. This is a frequent cause of excessive smoke.

Q. - A water glass was left on our wooden coffee table and not noticed for several hours. When the glass was removed, a white ring was left. Rubbing did not remove it. Any suggestions.

A. - Try rubbing it with camphorated oil. If the finish is varnish or lacquer and the ring does not disappear with the camphorated oil, rub the area with denatured alcohol. As a last resort, rub the stain with powdered pumice or rottenstone and a little oil. In all of these cases, there is the slight possibility you may have to touch up the area, but most of the time you won't have to do so.

3y The Associated Press

Looking for a way to give your home a contemporary look without costly redecorating?

One suggestion offered by designers is the addition of vinyl vertical blinds, which are available in a wide range of colors to match any interior design theme.

One style of blind allows for the incorporation of various inserts — such as fabric, woven wood or wall covering — for a change in decor.

The blinds also can help keep rooms cooler in the summer and cut down on fuel bills during the winter because of vinyl's insulating properties.

Sales of ready-made and custom-made blinds and accessories have increased in recent years, and one survey estimates that more than 12 million consumers between the ages of 18 and 49 purchased ready-made drapes in 1985.

"Homeowners are looking for drapes that are sturdy, easy to maintain and affordable," says Dale Stroud, a marketing director in B.F. Goodrich's vinyl division, who notes that vertical blinds are an economical alternative to traditional drapes, which have to be dry-cleaned.

From Roslindale to 'This Old House', local firm grows

Beside being a regular on PBS "This Old House" Richard Trethewey of Trethewey Bros., Roslindale is one of three plumbing contractors who will be in a film designed to train contractors in the newest heating and plumbing technologies.

The 30 minute, 16mm film produced by the A.O. Smith Water Products Co., is being shown at sales training seminars hosted by participating A.O. Smith Wholesalers for their contractor customers.

Of the three contractors, Trethewey is the most visible because of his role on PBS television show "This Old House" which airs on 250 PBS stations across the country.

Trethewey Bros. became affiliated with "This Old House" six years ago because of a last minute cancellation before the first show. As Trethewey recently explained it in an article by William M. Cowen, the producers of the show called the company when the original plumber set to appear in the show cancelled. The company has been with the show ever since.

The company may have been chosen for the show in part because of their work installing heating systems for Boston Gas Co. during the 1970's. Boston Gas donated a heating system to the show and recommended some installers, one of which was Trethewey Bros.

Ronald Trethewey, the company's president, appeared on the show during the first year. After that his son, Richard Trethewey then assumed the on air position. Richard Trethewey is the sales and engineering manager for the 85-year-old Boston firm. Working alongside his three brothers, the company has a team management approach, something that has attributed to their successs.

Founded in 1902 by Harry (Richard Trethewey's great grandfather) and Harry's brother William, Trethewey Brothers now employs 50 people, operates a fleet of 17 vans, and has a sales volume of $3 million annually. The firm has a small showroom, although it uses a nearby wholesaler's new showroom to demonstrate new remodeling possibilities.

In the early years, the company's business consisted of installing plumbing and heating systems in the one-two and three family houses in the Boston suburbs.

The family's participation has been continuous ever since. After William and Harry, George Trethewey (Harry's son) ran the business from the 1930's to the late 1950's. By that time the company emphasized repair and remodeling rather than new construction.

George was suceeded by his son, Ron, who is now president of the company. Ron's younger brother, George Jr., joined the firm in the 1960's and is now vice president, operations. Ron's son Richard is sales and engineering manager. His son, Robert, is purchaser and controller, and his wife, Nancy, heads the company's accounts receivable department.

not essential for cleaning and wastes energy.

If conserving water and energy is your primary concern, the engineers suggest you choose a front-loader. With a full load of wash, they use 25 to 30 gallons of water, compared with 40 to 57 gallons for top-loaders. If you prefer to do the most laundry with the fewest steps, choose a top-loader.

When choosing a machine, double-check the dimensions to make sure you have enough room. Some models can be mounted flush with the wall; others need up to four inches extra for hoses. Check your installation to see in which direction the lid should open. Some top-loaders open to the back; others to the left.

early 20th century may have wanted to live in the spirit of the colonial period but certainly did not want the actual living conditions of those times. All the conveniences invented during the last half of the 19th century were incorporated into the Colonial Revival house.

Central heating allowed a more open floor plan, and generally the revival structure was larger than its earlier counterpart. One of the gable-end chimneys served the fireplace, for ambience and hospitality, while the other served the furnace — the real heat source.

TV dish offers viewing feast

By the editors
of Consumer Reports

Just about the time cable TV started making an impact, some people discovered that a smaller version of the satellite dishes used by cable companies could literally be put together in the back yard. Soon, home satellite dishes became a minor craze among people who weren't served by cable (and never would be), by people who reveled in getting cable TV for nothing and by just plain TV addicts. About 1.5 million people now own satellite earth stations.

To find out what it's like to own an earth station, Consumer Reports' engineers installed one for about $2,650. The system lets you tune into any one of the domestic communications satellites strung along an arc high above the equator. Satellite signals are very weak, which is why a large dish is needed to gather them in. Signals are strongest in the Midwest, so a dish that's 5 or 6 feet across might suffice there. But near the coasts, you need one that's 8 to 12 feet across.

Setting up a dish isn't all that easy. Two technicians spent 45 hours assembling and mounting a 10-footer. After adding such indoor components as a receiver and descrambler, the setup looked like spaghetti, with 15 separate wires and cables connecting all the parts. But once you're hooked up, there are about 150 different channels to choose from, offering an endless array of programming.

To get a particular channel, you have to aim the dish at a satellite. This may take some fine tuning, known as "tweaking." Upscale receivers, and probably all future ones, let you program the setting, so that you can tune into that satellite at the press of a button. The satellites have names like Galaxy 1 and Westar 4 and go by shorthand designations such as G1 or W4. The buttons on a remote-control unit are labeled with letters and numbers. To home in on a particular satellite, you tap in those its two-character codes.

Again using the remote control, you flip through the 24 channels to find the program you want to watch. There are several comprehensive program guides for satellite dish users on the market.

Home satellite systems can provide an impressive array of otherwise unavailable television programming, but they're not for everyone. They take up a lot of space, can dominate a landscape and are not exactly pretty.

A recent federal ruling makes dishes legal to own and prohibits discriminatory zoning. Local zoning laws, though, can still ban them if they also ban other types of antennae. For worthwhile reception, you need a site with a clear view of the two dozen or so special satellites along the equator. Watch out for local sources of interference, such as a nearby microwave transmitter.

Because a growing number of pay-TV programmers, like Home Box Office, are scrambling their signals, dish sales have slumped and prices have dropped dramatically. If you'd be content with the 100 or so stations that still remain unscrambled, this may be a good time to buy.

You should be able to get a reasonably well-equipped system for about $1,600. That includes a 10-foot aluminum-mesh dish, a motorized mount, the dish electronics and cables, a remote-controlled receiver and installation. Site preparation and stereo sound capability would be extra.

Figure an additional $395 for a descrambler box if you want to receive paid programming. Although one descrambler will decode 90 percent of scrambled programming, in most cases, you'll still have to pay each programmer a monthly fee. HBO charges $12.95 a month, for example, and can prevent your box from decoding its signal if you don't pay.

Buy from a reputable dealer who can survey your site as well as install and service the unit. Unless you're very handy and know what you're doing, don't try to install the system yourself.

Lampshades give a decorative lift

By The Associated Press

When your home meets your overall satisfaction, but you feel something is needed to provide a decorative lift, perhaps it's time to put new shades on the lamps.

New shades may renew lamps you have ceased to notice. They contribute more to the style of a room than might be supposed, and over the years they tend to become dusty, dirty, frayed and shabby. Since they are small themselves, lamp shades tend to be ignored.

Another reason for reshading is to change the style of a lamp, according to Hal Shapiro, director of design for Beth Weissman Lamps in New York.

He says that there is no such thing as "the" proper shade for a lamp. Make your selection according to personal taste and the proportions of the lamp. The same material may be traditional or contemporary depending on color and shape, he adds.

As a rule, the less variation between top and bottom, and the more neutral the color, the more traditional a shade will appear. By taking a traditional material, such as string or parchment, and making it up in an extreme shape and in an unusual color instead of white or beige, Shapiro changes the looks of lamps from traditional to trendy.

When selecting a new shade for a lamp, it's important to bring the lamp into the shade store and to try several different sizes and shapes before making a selection, says Shapiro.

According to Shapiro, you can expect a lamp shade to last at least five to six years without a problem. It's a good idea to vacuum because they do get dusty. However, he warns, don't wash a lamp shade. They may be labeled "hand sewn," but many also have some glued parts which may come loose in water.

Re-covering a shade is simpler than picking out a new shape. Many lamp outlets have a re-covering service, using the existing frameworks. Those who are handy can recover a shade themselves. Look in home sewing pattern books to find how-to information.

If you decide to change the shade, bear in mind these guidelines from lighting authority Jane Grosslight, author of the book, "Light." She says that shades should be deep enough to hide the bulb, wide enough to spread the light and dense enough to obscure the light bulb. Those lined with white will reflect the greatest amount of light.

Shades may be translucent or opaque; the wider the opening, the wider the beam of light will be. Light spread is more noticeable with opaque shades because of contrast.

If a lamp is providing reading or task lighting, make sure the shade is wide at the bottom. If a large area is to be illuminated by light that reflects into the room from the ceiling, choose a shade that is wide at the top.

Making a home energy efficient

By Burt Hubbard
Scripps Howard News Service

In the coming months, as the days become cooler, consumers will be bombarded by a wide array of often-costly energy-saving devices.

"Smart" windows, which automatically control the amount of sunlight coming into the home and computerized thermostats for regulating heat, are among the latest entries in energy conservation.

But homeowners don't have to spend thousands or even hundreds of dollars to keep their heating bills down. Some of the most effective methods are also the cheapest.

The age of computers has now entered the energy business with intricate systems available on the market that control temperatures and automatically shut off heat to unused rooms. However, consumers can do the same things without spending a penny.

Simply turning down the thermostat to 65 degrees during the day and 60 degrees or lower at night will save a bundle on bills. And anyone can shut off heat to vacant rooms by closing the vents by hand.

Energy-efficient furnaces are now standard at most stores. But energy experts say it isn't worth the money to rush out and buy one if your less-efficient furnace is still in good shape.

Instead, homeowners can tune up their furnaces — most local utility companies will show you how. For homeowners with gas furnaces, changing the filter regularly saves on heat.

Windows are one of the largest sources of energy leaks. Storm windows are effective, and technological advances have made them more efficent than ever. But they're not cheap.

Homeowners can construct their own make-shift storm windows using strong plastic either nailed or taped over the existing windows. Kits are even available for handy homeowners.

There are no real alternatives to insulation. Both attics and walls should have some insulation. Insulation for the attic is the simplest — buy the rolls and layer the attic.

But wall insulation requires blowing the material into the walls. That takes an expert.

There are other inexpensive methods such as caulking and weatherstripping.

As a result, saving on heating bills doesn't have to cost an arm and a leg.

Consumer reports concern new products

A protective hand cream for do-it-yourselfers — Manufacturer's claim — That this product is designed to protect the hands and nails from dirt, grease, grime and paint by putting it on before beginning a project ... that it forms an invisible protective shield that not only keeps grease and stains from getting into the skin and under the nails but enables users to get a firm grip on the objects they are handling ... that, after completing a project, the cream is washed off with soap and water ... and that it is non-toxic and non-flammable.

A speedblock sander in compact size — Manufacturer's claim — That this sander is like that used by professionals, but weighs only three pounds ... that it has a one-handed palm grip and delivers 13,000 orbits per minute ... that its compact design makes it easy to get into tight spaces while offering flush sanding on three sides ... that it has a 1.8 amp direct-drive motor with no gearing to lose power ... that spring-type clamps provide for quick paper changes and firm retention of quarter-sheet sandpaper ... and that its 8-foot cord prevents the plug from catching on the edges of large panels.

A new type of shade pull — Manufacturer's claim — That this pull is made of wood and attached directly to the bottom of any standard window shade ... that it will prevent the shade from flapping out of control and uncoiling the spring inside the roller ... that, because of their weight and the fact they are turned on lathes into carefully balanced shapes, they insure the shades will hang straight and fully extended ... that they come in a wide variety of shapes, sizes and colors ... and that they are made of ash or rock maple, the hardest native American woods.

Homesharing may be the answer

Homesharing answered the prayers of a young wife dreading living another year in married-student housing.

And for the 83-year-old diabetic widow who opened her home to the couple, it brought company and security.

Matchmaker Suzy Karberg pairs elderly central Indiana homeowners who have room to share and Purdue University students who have love to spare. So far, Karberg has logged 37 matches, all successes.

Karberg coordinates what began two years ago as a federal- and state-funded pilot program. It's now absorbed into the budget of the Lafayette-based area IV Agency on Aging and was one of only four such programs in the nation when it started.

The young couple, Pam and Mark Westfall, and the widow, Ruth Osborn, were Karberg's first match involving a married couple. Their sharing began in August 1984. Osborn was recovering from her husband Harold's death.

"The visiting nurse didn't want me to live alone," she recalls.

She moved into her home's back end, complete with private entry, kitchenette, bedroom, bath, family room and parakeet named Chipper. Pam and Mark took the front end, blending their modular couch and contemporary furniture with Osborn's antiques and family pictures telling of a century past.

"Working in a health-care facility like I do, I see a lot of older people who could live in their own home if they just had someone there," says Pam, an administrative intern in a nursing home.

One reason the elderly often run into trouble is that they eat improperly and become malnourished, Karberg says.

Osborn admits, "I'm seldom all that hungry. I'd just as soon eat this and that instead of cooking a meal just for myself."

"That's why we try to get her to eat with us when we can," Pam says.

This labor of love and care works both ways. Sometimes Osborn washes their dishes.

"They often take off for church, and I get fidgety," she says. "I don't mind doing the dishes. They have to work hard enough as it is."

She also takes comfort in knowing "the children," as she calls them, are within calling distance.

"A night ago they thought I fell out of bed," she says. "Actually, I knocked my husband's cane down, and it made such a racket. About that time I heard Mark call. It's good to know they're there."

Mark also helps around the house with the mowing and snow shoveling, even though it's not a part of their contract.

That's just as well, because they've let their contract expire. Their relationship has grown beyond the type on a legal document.

The three agree their arrangement has worked because they didn't compromise what they really wanted during the selection process.

"At first the agency asked if I wanted to take in a boy who'd never been away from home before," Osborn says. "I said I didn't want to baby-sit."

Pam and Mark, who are gone at least nine hours a day during the week, were looking for a housemate who didn't require extensive care.

They have separate kitchens and living space connected by never-locked doors. They feel free to visit and borrow, yet respect each other's privacy.

"For example, I had stored some orange juice in their refrigerator because mine is so small," Osborn says. "One night I needed it, but Pam had company over, so I just called her on the telephone so I wouldn't disturb her company."

Each contract drawn up with Karberg's assistance is custom-made all the way down to who will provide the towels.

The proper way to paint a home

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith Magazine

There's more to creating professional-looking paint finishes than the stroke of a brush.

Correct preparation of wall surfaces before the paint goes on is a significant factor, according to Better Homes and Gardens Decorating Magazine.

It's important to scrutinize every surface so the necessary preparation can be tackled before you begin painting. Check the walls and ceilings for cracks, runs, or ridges in the old paint.

These conditions can be treated with a scraper and sandpaper, plus primer for bare spots. If you spot peeling paint, you'll have to remove it and prime the surface.

Mend plaster or drywall blemishes with premixed spackling paste or joint compound. Once you've made repairs, wash all surfaces with a household detergent and rinse well.

Unless you've got a steady hand, cover window perimeters with masking tape before painting the window trim. Peel off the tape immediately after painting.

To be a successful painter you must start at the top, then work your way down — unlike most other endeavors. Begin by painting the ceiling at the angle where the ceiling meets the walls. Trim the entire perimeter of the ceiling before proceeding.

Although it's fine to use a brush on the rest of the ceiling, a roller on an extension handle is easier. Paint rollers emit a fine spray of paint that settles over the room like dust, so be sure to cover everything.

Begin painting the wall with a brush, trimming the angles where two walls meet and around all windows, doors, and other woodwork. The trim should be just wide enough to cover the corner surfaces a roller can't reach.

For large wall surfaces, evenly load a roller with paint and apply it in a large M shape. Start the roller going up, then pull it down. To ensure an even surface, fill in the M by rolling horizontally across it.

Brits ring their bells

By Larry Thorson
Associated Press Writer

EDITOR'S NOTE — Britain has its share of stamp and coin collectors, animal lovers and gardening enthusiasts. It also has a unique group of hobbyists — people who climb church towers in their spare time to ring bells. This is one of a series of periodic Associated Press reports on the way of life in other countries.

LONDON (AP) — To the uninitiated, ringing a church bell may not seem like a consuming pastime. But in Britain, where bells are rung differently from most other places, thousands of people have a passion for bell-ringing.

About 1,000 of them flocked to London recently to try the bells in 79 churches and cathedrals where the bell towers had been specially thrown open to them.

The day ended with more than 800 ringers packed into Southwark Cathedral on the south bank of the River Thames for an evensong thanksgiving service to mark the 75th anniversary of a newsletter for bell-ringers, "The Ringing World," which devotes page after page to notes of who has rung bells and where.

Before the service many climbed the narrow spiral staircase to the ringing room in the 11th-century cathedral where, standing in a circle in teams of 12, they heaved on ropes hanging through holes in the ceiling and set the 12 bells resounding over a wide area.

"I haven't just been to London," Keith Fleming said between spells ringing the 2½-ton tenor, the largest bell. "I've been to London and rung at Southwark Cathedral. ... Ringing takes you to places in the country that you would never otherwise go to."

Fleming, 46, started ringing church bells at age 16.

"Once it bites you ... it's got you for life," he said. "You can spend as much time on it as you like. Some people are perhaps a bit fanatical and spend every waking hour ringing, while others have other interests."

The manager of an auto-repair garage in Wimborne, Dorset, in southwest England, Fleming said bell-ringers come from a wide range of backgrounds.

His team in London consisted of people from age 12 to 66, men and women, some wearing bell-shaped lapel badges and T-shirts boasting membership in bell-ringing groups around Britain.

Some are drawn to bell-ringing to serve the church, some for the music, and some for the intricate mathematical patterns of the unique style of English ringing, called change-ringing.

Bell-ringing has a special vocabulary. A set of bells is a peal; the one with the highest note is the treble, the lowest note is the tenor. They can be rung in simple rounds, meaning in order from the highest to the lowest, or in changes: "doubles" on five bells, "triples" on seven bells, "caters" on nine bells, "cinques" on 11 bells, "maximus" on 12 bells.

Since change-ringing was devised in early 17th-century England, people have composed for peals of bells, creating ever-varying melodies as the ringers change the order in which the bells sound.

The bells rotate 360 degrees, and a trained ringer can make a bell hesitate in the up position to change the bell sequence. Good ringers can do the change smoothly, keeping the rhythm steady and developing a pattern.

Not surprisingly, some churches have bells that aren't rung, for lack of trained ringers.

"It's a great shame," said the Rev. Eric Last, a chaplain at Southwark Cathedral. "You can't do it with less than one on each rope, so when there's not that number of people, they've got to suspend ringing until they've trained enough people up."

Southwark Cathedral was without ringers in the early 1960s, but a team of ringers came in from another diocese, including Michael Uphill, now the captain of ringers at the Anglican cathedral.

Uphill, 39, learned to ring at age 12.

"I was in the choir, and when my voice broke I was roped in — not to put a pun on it — to take up ringing," he said.

"It's mentally stimulating, it's great fun. ... Apart from the service aspect of it which is very important, it's a great social thing as well."

Uphill, an administrator for an engineering firm, said he enjoyed the music of the bells, especially the Stedman Cinques change that was booming out from Southwark Cathedral as he spoke.

"There are only 70-odd 12-bell towers in the world, and only four or five of them are overseas, so almost all are in this country. The sound of Stedman Cinques is a glorious, thrilling sound to someone who knows it well and rings it a lot."

Auto Mileage List

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is the list of the Environmental Protection Agency's fuel economy ratings for 1987 model year vehicles.

The mileage figure is based on city driving. EPA cautions that the number should be used for comparison purposes only since a motorist's actual mileage could vary widely from the estimate.

The first column shows miles per gallon.

The second column gives the manufacturer and the model.

The third column shows the type of transmission — either manual (M) or automatic (A) — and the number of gears. If the car runs on diesel fuel, that is indicated by a D in front of the transmission listing.

The fourth column gives the engine size in cubic inches and the number of cylinders.

In some cases, apparently identical listings will show different or identical mileage ratings. This occurs because of some factor which is not shown on this table, such as different types of carburetors, and sometimes may be reflected in different highway mileage ratings, which are not shown. The different fuel systems may or may not differentiate cars sold in California and the rest of the country; EPA says it does not compile a separate list of California cars any more and does not distinguish those cars in the overall list.

The size classifications are EPA's own, based on interior volume, and do not confirm with size classifications in common use in the auto industry.

There may be some manufacturers whose tests were not completed in time and their cars are not listed below.

City mourns for McDonnell

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Former Alderman and board President Joseph M. McDonnell was known as a master politician, an advocate for the underprivileged and one of Newton's earliest opponents of the Vietnam War.

Silently, sadly, the board paid tribute to his memory after City Clerk Edward English announced the 53-year-old Newton Corner resident had passed away last week at the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute.

Funeral services were held at St. Ignatius Church last Saturday, with Fr. Robert Drinan saying the requiem mass and McDonnell's former aldermanic colleagues acting as pall bearers.

"Truly a giant of a human being has been taken from our midst," English said, just as the board was about to adjourn last week's meeting.

The cit clerk then painted a verbal portrait of a humane man whose views were ahead of his times but who, nevertheless, had the savvy to triumph in the political arena.

"Throughout his entire political life, he fostered progressive legislation in this city as a champion of the poor, the disadvantaged and the rights of minorities," according to the city clerk.

"He was one of the first to publicly denounce and to lead the movement in stopping the Vietnam War," English recalled.

McDonnell would carry on floor fights for his beliefs until the wee hours of the morning and was affectionately dubbed "Captain Midnight" by his colleagues.

That tenacity led the developer of the Chestnut Hill Towers complex to contribute to the city's low-income housing stock, bringing to birth the 10 Percent ordinance.

"He tenaciously hammered out a deal with that petitioner at a meeting one night at City Hall that lasted until 3:45 a.m., the longest meeting known to me in my 16-year career with the city," English said.

Crime rate cut by 1/3

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Crime in the Garden City has dropped 31 percent since 1975, due primarily to an increased resident awareness and quick response from officers, according to John Donovan, police department crime analyst.

The total crime index for 1985 was 2,854 compared to 4,162 in 1975. The index is a count of crimes reported including homicide, rape, robbery, assault, burglaries, larceny and motor vehicle thefts.

The largest reduction is in home burglaries that were at an all time low of 509 in 1985, almost a 50 percent decrease since 1975.

Larcenies, the most rampant crime in Newton, comprise more than half of the crime index.

"Sometimes the larceny figure can skew the total crime index number," Donovan said. "Most of these thefts are from motor vehicles, shoplifting or petty thefts which sometimes go unreported for several days. They're the hardest to control."

Donovan attributed the drop in home burglaries to an ongoing program of crime prevention tips from police. Most thieves gain entrance to homes through unlocked windows and doors, Donovan added, and are being deterred by residents securing their homes and belongings.

"The harder you make it for them to get into your home, the less likely they are to go through with the crime," Donovan said.

A majority of crime incidents occur on the north side of Commonwealth Avenue where the city is more densely populated, he said. The south side of the city is hardest hit with motor vehicle thefts because of the large parking lots at Chestnut Hill Mall and five MBTA station stops.

"The north side of the city is not necessarily more dangerous," Donovan said. "There are just more people which raises the chances of having more crime incidents."

Violent crimes, which typically have been low in Newton, also have decreased. In 1985 there was one homicide, two attempted rapes and no rapes. There were four rapes and two homicides reported in 1975.

Armed robberies were the highest in 1979 with 46 reported. That figure was down more than 50 percent in 1985.

Waltham's 1985 crime index of 2,327 is lower than Newton's, but the city's populations is about 25,000 less. Waltham had more home burglaries and rapes (13) than Newton for 1985, but fewer motor vehicle thefts and larcenies.

"Waltham doesn't have any large malls or MBTA stations running through their city which is why their motor vehicle thefts are lower than ours," Donovan said.

There were over 300 drunk driving arrests in 1985 in Newton — about 250 more than 1975, which police attribute to stronger awareness and enforcement.

Illegal apts. threatened

By Les Orsini

NEWTON — In the aftermath of complaints from a Chestnut Hill landlord who was fined for violating the city's zoning code, two property owners and their Newtonville neighbors collided last week in a zoning battle which could prompt evictions from illegal dwellings citywide.

John Curry and Chauncy Perry asked the Land Use Committee to change the zoning on a portion of Newtonville Avenue so they can keep presently illegal dwellings. Otherwise several tenants face eviction, said their attorneys, Jason Rosenberg and Peter Harrington.

But neighbors called on aldermen to uphold the zoning, saying illegal units bring noise, traffic and too many people. Mark Landsberg, an architect who owns a two-family home on Newtonville Avenue, presented a petition signed by 52 residents opposing the zone change.

"We have concerns about current and increasing amounts of traffic, transiency of renters ... upkeep of the properties by nonresident owners and the increased hazard of of visitor parking," a cover letter to the petition reads.

Rosenberg and Harrington are seeking a zone change to legalize the extra units with a special permit. The complicated petition would first change the city's zoning to allow dwellings to be added to single- or two-family homes in Residence D districts.

It would then downgrade one side of Newtonville Avenue from Harvard to Walnut streets from Private Residence to Residence D. Curry owns 410 Newtonville Ave. and Perry 432 Newtonville Ave., the bookends of the proposed zone.

Budget defies declining enrollment

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The cost of operating the Newton Public Schools is expected to increase to about $61.8 million by fiscal 1992, which is a 34 percent increase over the fiscal year 1987 budget, according to school officials.

Despite continual declining enrollment and a reduction in staff, cost of living expenses and teacher salary increases are forcing the budget up. Each year the school budget is projected to increase by approximately 6 percent, which translates into about a $3 million annual leap, according to figures presented to the School Committee by Vincent Silluzio, assistant superintendent of operations and planning and Jim Egan, director of budget and accounting.

The fiscal 1992 enrollment is expected to be around 3 percent lower than this year, according to the report. High school enrollment is expected to decline 28 percent and at the junior high level it is anticipated to drop 10 percent in the next three years.

Junior high school enrollment will pick up again after three years so that the enrollment will be almost identical to this year's by 1992. At the elementary schools enrollment is projected to increase 13 percent.

In order to maintain the desired 25:1 teacher pupil ratio, the teaching staff will be cut by about 6 percent (31 teachers) over five years.

Salary increases reportedly represent one of the largest portions in the budget. Teacher salary increases have been determined through 1989 with a 7 percent increase negotiated for 1988 and six percent for 1989. A 5 percent salary increase has been assumed for the remaining years.

The annual cost projection through 1992 are based on the assumption that no changes will be made in existing programs, according to Silluzio. Cost adjustments are predominantly made according to enrollment fluctuations and corresponding staff changes.

Silluzio said the cost of possibly reopening Bigelow Junior High School if grade reorganization is approved by the School Committee, is not included in the five year cost projection. If Bigelow is reopened the budget will increase, he said.

By February, the committee is expected to decide whether to change the present junior high school system to a middle school organization which will group grades six, seven and eight together.

Safety vs. convenience stirs debate over closing median at Woodcliff Rd. and Rte. 9

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — Traffic inconvenience — said to be caused by the the temporary median closing on Route 9 at Woodcliff Road — has taken precedence over safety for some Newton Highlands residents.

Some go so far as to say there never was a problem at the intersection until the city's Traffic Commission approved the trial barrier.

William Nast, a Woodcliff Road resident for 57 years, said the commission has overreacted by considering sealing the Route 9 crossing permanently.

"What they need to do is use a little common sense and simply upgrade the street lights, lower the speed limit and put warning signs on Route 9," Nast said. "We're locked in on the south side of Route 9 without that intersection open. We have to drive all the way around town to get to the stores and we are forced to use other intersections more hazardous than Woodcliff Road to get there."

Several months ago, outraged residents petitioned the commission to make the intersection safer. The outcry resulted from a fatal accident at the intersection in June.

Marcia Henry, a Newton Highland's mother of four, was killed when a truck allegedly ran a red light on Route 9 and barreled into her car as she was crossing on Woodcliff Road.

In July, the Traffic Commission petitioned the state Department of Public Works (DPW) to close the median for a 45-day trial period which has been extended to mid-October for further study.

Nast, who is an architect and engineer, said the core of the problem is the speed at which vehicles travel on Route 9. The speed problem is exacerbated because there are no warning signs before the intersection indicating a traffic signal is up ahead, he said.

New resource for parents of blind children

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Parents of blind or visually impaired children carry a heavy load. They often feel isolated, overwhelmed and uncertain of their ability to raise the child, but now resources are being developed that could help them cope with their situation.

It is just for these parents that an off-shoot of the International Institute for the Blind and Visually Impaired in Auburndale provides support, advice and information.

While the volunteers and employees of the Parent Resource Center serve as a support system, Director Sherry Raynor said more importantly, the parents are there for each other. They swap and compare notes about their children's progress and unique problems. They comfort one another.

"Parents share their frustrations and successes with each other and by communicating they realize their problems — which they thought no one else could understand — are universal among parents of blind children," Raynor said.

Coordinator Judi Simmons gives four-year-old Kristen Sullivan some encouragement while she makes pizza for lunch.

Raynor, the mother of a blind daughter, discovered firsthand that there were no programs, informational services or support groups for her to turn to. She said the nine-month old resource center is the only agency of its kind in the country that focuses on helping pre-school blind children and their parents.

"We get calls and letters from all over the country and in some case from other countries seeking help and information," Raynor said. "The saddest thing is that so many parents with blind children in the area don't even know our services exist."

For West Newton parent Judy, who requested anonymity, the center has been a godsend. For seven years, she raised her legally blind son with little guidance or outside support. It was lonely.

"It was hard for me to understand there were other parents in the same boat as me. It's so easy to feel lost and helpless, but with a visually impaired child you have to constantly stay on top of things," she said. "I don't know how I coped all these years without a group such as this. We need places like this where we can ask questions and get answers."

Judy's son, a student in the Newton Public Schools, never gave up. He is the only visually impaired student at the elementary school and is athletically active.

Mayor will decide on Bigelow soon

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann expects to decide "reasonably soon" whether to temporarily relocate some municipal offices at the vacant Bigelow Junior High School.

The city's Planning Department has explored the feasibility of moving the school agencies not housed at City Hall — including the Health Department, Community Schools and the Boys and Girls Library. Mann has a preliminary draft of that study.

The aldermanic Real Property Reuse Committee at the same time is asking Mann to let local artists groups lease space at Bigelow for up to two years.

During a recent press conference, Mann said the decision is complicated because the School Department is unsure whether it will need to reclaim the Bigelow as a school.

"There are a whole bunch of mixed messages," the mayor said. "It's confusing as to what the School Department strategy is."

The previous School Committee in 1985 voted to close the Bigelow because of declining enrollment. The present School Committee — which has four new members — turned the building over to the city this summer, but asked aldermen not to sell it.

The committee plans to explore adopting a middle school system, which would add grade six to the junior highs and force the School Department to reopen the Bigelow.

According to school officials, the earliest this could happen would be in September 1988 and it is possible there may be no grade reorganization at all.

The mayor must mull all these possibilities while the Bigelow remains vacant and a prey to vandalism.

"It's very difficult to imagine the next step," Mann said. "To leave that building vacant for 18 months, I find quite disturbing."

But if the city were to occupy the building only to have the School Department reclaim it in 1988, new homes would have to be found for the displaced municipal agencies, Mann said.

"I'd hate to think the decisions are being made just because of space," Mann said of school officials. "There has to be some educational reasons."

Recently, School Committee members Sally Rizzo and Sydra Schnipper outlined some of the educational benefits of moving grade six to the junior highs and reopening the Bigelow.

Many of the city's elementary schools are now cramped for space and lack the facilities for special programs, such as art and music, Rizzo said.

Moving grade six to the junior highs would make two classrooms available in each elementary school for such programs, she said.

At the same time, sixth graders would have increased educational opportunities at the junior highs, Schnipper said.

Because the junior highs operate on a departmental system, the youngsters would have the opportunity to begin foreign language studies a year early, she said. They also would be able to take shop, photography and home economics classes and participate in organized athletics.

But school officials also must weigh the cost of reorganizing grades and reopening the Bigelow. "Having an additional building has an ongoing expense," she said. "There will be increased (bus) transportation costs."

Schnipper, who began her first term in January, said she spoke out against closing the Bigelow when the previous School Committee raised the issue. Her opposition was one of the principal reasons she ran for office, Schnipper said.

"I felt the decision was being made too quickly," said Schnipper, who was not a committee member when the 1985 decision to close the Bigelow was made.

Schnipper said she had "grave reservations" when the committee voted to turn the building over to the city this summer — especially since Bigelow is the last secondary school scheduled to be closed.

But with secondary school enrollment down and no classes scheduled for the Bigelow this year, the committee had no choice.

"We cannot be using educational funds to support an empty building," she said. "We don't have unlimited resources."

Court decision against city allows townhomes

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — For the second time in less than three months, the courts have granted a zoning petition because city officials failed to act in time.

Last week John Neville was given the go-ahead by a Middlesex Superior Court judge to build nine townhouses in Upper Falls. The judge ruled that the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) did not act within the alloted 75 days for such petitions.

That decision comes on the heels of a July decision by the Land Court allowing Newton Equity Partners to build six condominium units in Auburndale. The Land Court ruled that the Board of Aldermen did not act within the 90 days allowed for special permit requests.

According to Robert Cohen, the attorney representing Neville, the Superior Court decision was based on an earlier decision in Hingham allowing developers to build, despite not being granted a zone change, if the municipal body fails to act before a given deadline.

City Solicitor Daniel Funk said the city argued against allowing Neville to build his units, because the developer had not obtained the necessary zone change on his 43,000-square-foot lot on the corner of Rockland Place and Lucille Place in Upper Falls.

Cohen successfully countered that argument by pointing to the Hingham decision.

"Normally, we would have needed a special permit and a zone change from the Board of Aldermen to build the nine units," Cohen said. "But, we won the decision and now we don't need that permission from the board."

Cohen said Neville's problems began in April, 1983, when he filed a petition with the board asking for a zone change and a special permit. He said the public hearing was held in August of that year but the board failed to take action until April 1984 when it voted that no action on the petition was necessary.

At that point, Cohen said he submitted an application for a building permit to the Building Department, which was denied. He then appealed that decision to the ZBA at the end of August.

The ZBA, he said, held a public hearing in October and made a decision, but did not file that decision — which was a denial of Cohen's position — until Dec. 2.

Under state law, the ZBA must act within 75 days and file within 14 days after that or the permit is automatically approved. Because the ZBA took 94 days to file, instead of the alloted 89, Cohen said he took the position his client was granted a building permit by default.

The city, however, countered unsuccessfully by claiming that the land was not properly zoned, but Cohen pointed to the Hingham decision.

ZBA Chairman Harold Meizler refused comment on the ruling.

"The city has been burned twice in a short period of time on these deadlines," Cohen said. "They have to understand they cannot just jerk developers around. That is why these deadlines exist."

He added that if his petition had been acted on by the board, Neville would only have been allowed to build four units instead of the nine he can now build.

Cohen said he is waiting to hear from Neville before commenting on when construction might begin.

McDonnell mourned

McDonnell served 14 years as an alderman and was board president in 1976 and 1977, English said. He gave up the presidency so Alderman Matthew Jefferson, the board's first black member, could take over the post.

A "brilliant" trial attorney for the Boston firm of Parker, Coulter, Daley & White, McDonnell left the board in 1979 to concentrate on his career and spend more time with his wife, Nancy, and two daughters, English said.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann phoned city hall shortly before 9 p.m. to inform the clerk of McDonnell's death.

The news saddened longstanding aldermen who spoke of McDonnell in terms just as glowing as the clerk's.

President Emeritus Wendell Bauckman, a board member for 45 years, said McDonnell was "personable, sociable, affable and brilliant."

"He was recognized for his fairness and his complete and colossal dedication to the citizens of Newton," Bauckman said.

McDonnell was part of a Democratic coalition which wrested control of the board from the Republicans in 1972 and unseated Bauckman from the presidency after 20 years.

Alderman Richard McGrath, whose 1971 election gave democrats their first board majority, said McDonnell was a major influence on his own legislative style.

"He was a man who felt this was the place for debate," McGrath said. "He believed argument belonged here and when you voiced a minority opinion, you were participating."

Alderman Richard Bullwinkle, who described McDonnell as "compassionate," said they first met while working on Senator John Kennedy's 1960 presidential campaign.

He was struck by the intellectual brilliance of McDonnell, who taught philosophy at Boston College while in his 20s. "He just had a quiet awareness of what was going on around him and he was always thinking a couple of steps ahead of you," Bullwinkle said.

"He had the innate ability to think on his feet and declaim," said English. "He was always the last one to speak on an issue. That was the way he worked the gears. That was the way he turned around the votes in his direction."

Former official is sent back to prison

BOSTON — A Newton resident who was once a Watertown municipal employee convicted of federal extortion charges last year is back in jail again, after refusing to answer questions before a federal grand jury.

James Pepicelli, 64, was held in contempt by U.S. District Court Judge Rya Zobel and imprisoned until he either agrees to cooperate or the grand jury is dismissed.

The grand jury's term ends in October 1987 but it could finish up its work before then, according to Pepicelli's attorney in the case, William Homans. The records of the case were sealed by Zobel, and neither Homans nor court officials would reveal the nature of the investigation or the questions that Pepicelli refused to answer.

Nor would court officials say where Pepicelli is imprisoned.

Homans, who no longer represents Pepicelli, said his former client declined to respond to the grand jury because "he felt he had paid his penalty. He wanted to put the matter behind him."

The attorney was asked whether that meant the grand jury investigation involved activities connected to those Pepicelli was convicted of last year — extorting money from housing contractors.

"I can't comment on the facts of the case," Homans said.

However, Pepcelli was asked by prosecutors to cooperate with an investigation into similar illegal activities in the Boston area after he pleaded guilty to eight of 33 federal charges last November. Pepicelli refused, according to assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas J. Curley.

Pepicelli entered guilty pleas to four counts of extortion, one of attempted extortion and three counts of submitting false bids, while he supervised Watertown's federally-funded Home Improvement Program.

He was accused of taking more than $10,000 from four contractors in exchange for favorable treatment in the awarding and supervision of home rehabilitation jobs.

He was sentenced in December to two years in jail and two years of probation, but U.S. District Court Judge Walter Skinner suspended most of the prison term.

Pepicelli served 90 days in jail and was ordered by Skinner to perform 10 to 20 hours of community service work each week during his probation.

Residents safe after Mill St. house fire

NEWTON — Assisted by Officer John Geary, an elderly man and his daughter escaped serious injury last week when their Mill Street home was partially engulfed in smoke and flames.

Ralph Jacobson, 72, sustained only minor burns and his daughter, Sheryl, 38, was unharmed. Geary severely cut his left hand when he broke the glass on the door of the second floor apartment to check for other victims in the house.

At about 9 a.m. yesterday Geary drove by 276 Mill St. and saw smoke coming from the front door at which time he called in the house fire and requested police assistance.

"As I was approaching the house I saw an elderly man coming out the front door dragging a blanket that was completely engulfed in flames," Geary said. "I had put out the flames from the blanket when the man told me his daughter was still inside the house."

Geary entered the smoke-filled house and found Sheryl Jacobson standing about five feet from the flames coming from the master bedroom. Geary said the bedroom was completely ablaze and there was a blanket of thick heavy smoke.

"I called to her but she didn't respond. She just stood there staring at the fire," Geary said. "When she didn't respond to my call I went in and pulled her out of the house."

Sheryl Jacobson then told Geary that people were home in the second floor apartment. When he rang the bell and no one answered the door, Geary smashed the door window with his club to gain entrance but found nobody home.

The fire, which was contained to the bedroom, is belived to have been caused by faulty electrical wiring in the bedroom, according to Assistant Fire Chief William Dwyer. The first floor of the house sustained smoke damage and the second floor apartment appeared undamaged, he added.

Bus vs. trolley service on ballots

NEWTON — Some local voters will have a chance to voice their opinion on the MBTA's Newton Corner bus service in November.

Question 9, which asks voters if the MBTA should replace the current No. 57 bus route running from Kenmore Square to Newton Corner with trolley service, will appear on election ballots in Ward 1, precincts 1 and 3 and Ward 7, precinct 2. In addition, voters in sections of Allston and Brighton will vote on the issue.

While the question will be nonbinding, MBTA spokesman Timothy Gens said opinions registered by voters will be taken into account when the MBTA determines the future of public transportation in the area.

"Our initial survey indicated that buses are the preferable mode of transportation in terms of both service and cost effectiveness," he id. "But there is an on-going study into the service in that area and we are interested in the opinions of riders, communities and perspective riders."

The ballot question asks if the bus route should be replaced by the "A" branch of the MBTA's Green Line. Tracks for this branch already exist and run on the Washington Street bus route. The tracks are used occasionally to transfer trolleys to and from the MBTA's repair barn in Watertown Square.

Gens said the MBTA is studying the cost effectiveness of upgrading the tracks in order to return service on the A branch, but aldermen from the area and Mayor Theodore Mann expressed concern over problems now caused by those tracks.

"I think it's about time we came to grips with the fact that train service in the area is obsolete," Ward 1 Aldermen Bruce Carmichael said, adding the tracks pose a real problem for motorists.

"They are very inconvenient and hazardous to motorists and pedestrians. I hope the MBTA maintains the bus service and does not bring back trolley service to the area."

If the MBTA were to resume train service, Carmichael said he would like to see it run underground.

"I think some people are into the days-gone-past syndrome," he said. "Maybe it was a unique experience a while ago to take a train trip into the city, but we are in a different era right now. If they want to resume train service, it should be done underground, because there is too much congestion above ground to have it any other way."

Boston recount may cost representation

NEWTON — The outcome of the Boston census recount eventually may cost the Garden City either state representative or Senate seats, according to election officials.

Election Commission Executive Secretary Alan Licarie said the recount may affect the way state legislative seats are redistricted, depending on new population figures offered by Boston. That city's original census figures, according to Licarie, were not accepted by Secretary of State Michael Connolly's office.

Boston originally reported having some 620,000 residents. But Robert Williams, deputy secretary of state, said those figures were flawed.

"We conducted an audit," Williams said, "and we estimated Boston's census at 592,000."

The key to the numbers game, Licarie said, is that there is approximately one representative seat for every 36,000 people and approximately one Senate seat for every 145,000 people. Because every district must be within 10 percent of every other district, Boston's population discrepancy could cost surrounding cities and towns — including Newton — state representation.

"Generally speaking," Licarie said, "incumbents' districts are favored during redistricting. With Newton set to have a new senator and a new representative, the freshmens' districts may be vulnerable."

Both Rep. James Brett (D-Boston) and Sen. John Brennan (D-Malden), respective chairmen of the House and Senate redistricting committees, agree the Boston recount will have a ripple effect on surrounding districts.

Two women kidnapped at gunpoint

NEWTON — One of two women reportedly abducted at gunpoint by a man in Boston was ordered out of the suspect's car at a Mobil gasoline station on Route 9 early last week, police said. The suspect, at about 3:30 a.m., then drove west on Route 9 toward Framingham with the woman's friend still in the car, according to police.

The pair was forced into the suspect's car near the Eliot Hotel on Commonwealth Avenue in downtown Boston. The driver reportedly drove around for about a half an hour before reaching Newton.

About an hour later, Framingham police found the other victim, who allegedly had been sexually assaulted before reaching Framingham. The first victim gave police the make and license plate number of the car the suspect was driving.

The suspect was stopped on Route 9 by Wellesley police at 5:05 a.m. The first victim was transported to Wellesley by Newton and Boston police where she positively identified both the suspect and the car, police said.

The suspect, described as a tall black male in his 20s, was reportedly turned over to Boston police. The suspect's identity was unknown to both Newton and Wellesley police.

Former local man dies in car accident

HOPKINTON — A former Newton resident died when his car smashed into the rear of a tractor-trailer parked in the breakdown lane on Route 495 in Hopkinton.

Kenneth Barry, 47, was pronounced dead at the scene of the accident after doctors in the University of Massachusetts Medical Center Life Flight helicopter were called out by State Police.

According to police, Barry was traveling in the northbound lane of Route 495, about a mile south of the turnpike, when he drifted out of the travel lane and into the breakdown lane. The right half of Barry's car caught the truck and Barry suffered a broken neck. No one else was in the car at the time of the accident, which occurred about 10 p.m.

The driver of the truck, who had pulled off the road to check his road maps, was not hurt. Police said he was not cited for any traffic violation.

Three local men on Forbes' rich list

BOSTON — Three Newton residents are among 11 Massachusetts residents included in Forbes' magazine's 1986 list of the 400 richest Americans.

Sumner Murray Redstone, 63, of Newton, made a whopping $450 million through movie theaters and investments, while Richard Alan Smith, 62, of Newton made about $275 million primarily through General Cinema theaters.

Also making the list was Paul Fireman, 42, of Newton, whose $270 million came from Reebok.

Topping the list of richest Bay Staters was Jane Bancroft Cook of Cohasset and Sarasota, Fla., who inherited her fortune estimated at $560 million.

But the 74-year-old woman's fortune was a bit smaller than the amount held by the richest American, Sam Moore Walton, 68. Walton, founder of the Wal-Mart discount stores, has an impressive $4.5 billion, according to the annual "Forbes 400."

An Wang of Lincoln, the 66-year-old founder and head of Wang Laboratories, was the second richest Bay Stater on the list with a fortune of $550 million coming mainly from his computer empire.

Another computer fortune was made by Kenneth Harry Olsen, 60, of Lincoln, whose $275 million comes from Digital Equipment Corp.

Three Boston men made the list, including William Ingraham Koch, 46, whose $500 million fortune was inherited. Edward Crosby Johnson III, 56, made his $350 million through investment management, and Boston landlord Harold Brown, 61, earned his through real estate.

Other Massachusetts millionaires on the list also inherited their fortunes. The estimated $200 million of Mary Belin du Pont Faulkner, 79, of Brookline, stems from the du Pont family fortune, while the estimated $190 million of Sandra Ferry, 51, of Cambridge, comes from the Rockefeller fortune.

Police, fire contracts still a struggle

The recently released annual report of the state's Joint Labor-Management Committee for Municipal Police and Fire reaffirms an opinion stated in the Newton Graphic while local police and firefighters were vigorously protesting prolonged negotiations aimed at new contracts early this year.

After providing statistics revealing that negotiations between municipalities and the police and firefighters who serve them are taking longer and longer to reach a settlement, the report states:

"The committee views this undeniable trend toward longer settlement times with concern. A bill proposed during the last legislative session and refiled in 1986 (House No. 863) would provide the committee some additional procedural means to help arrest this disturbing trend. The committee believes that, in the absence of some additional authority, it is unable to bring public safety collective bargaining disputes to timely resolution.

"Throughout its history, the committee has shown enormous flexibility in responding to a changing public sector labor relations enviroment; but, in order to ensure the committee's continued vitality, a wider variety of procedural tools must be place at its disposal."

While police and firefighters were picketing in the freezing rain, protesting the delays in settling their contracts, the Graphic advocated the passage of House No. 863 as the only means for providing a closure mechanism for the bargaining process. Without binding arbitration, which disappeared around the time Proposition 2½ was put into place, there is little incentive for the city to settle and a lot of incentive for its bargaining team to exhaust the opposition with delaying tactics.

We lament the fact that State Representative Joseph DeNucci (D - Newton, Waltham), a backer of House No. 863 who had enough clout on Beacon Hill to push it through eventually will no longer be in a position to do that. Polls show that he will soon be moving into the state auditor's office.

We hope his successor, Anthony Mandile, who has seen the bargaining process at work during his 13 years on the Waltham City Council will pick up the ball. Unfortunately, as a freshman representative, he will not enjoy the blockers DeNucci had in front of him, but pushing hard for the bill would seem to be part of his new office's heritage.

With the long-delayed police and fire contracts about to come up for negotiation again, we hope their union reps on Beacon Hill can devise an effective lobbying strategy that will avoid the logjam that marred the previous round of talks.

Since the Labor-Management Committee was formed over eight and one-half years ago, Chairman John T. Dunlop has been protesting that, without binding arbitration, his panel had "no teeth." Let's make giving it some a priority in the coming legislative session. It does little for public safety in the city to have disgruntled police and firefighters banging their heads against a brick wall for two years to secure a contract.

Even 'Sweepstakes' Kelly would be amazed

Francis E. Kelly, known as "Sweepstakes" in Massachusetts politics because of his longtime advocacy of a state lottery, would be amazed. Kelly never made the corner office at the State House, nor did he convince voters they should get into legal gambling. The effort he expended paid off long after his time had past. Massachusetts, hungry for painless extraction of revenue, followed other states into pot-of-gold land.

Our lottery has been enormously successful, a business generating more than a billion dollars annually and feeding millions into cities and towns. No one is complaining about the immorality of betting, as once was the case, and no one charges that the state is picking pockets of the poor. This may be, since desperation can spur the deprived into reaching for the moon, but it appears well over half the population in the Commonwealth play the numbers game.

Efficient operation and total absence of any scandal have won acceptance for the gambling concept.

The only question is how far the Lottery Commission masterminds will go in devising new ways to pull in dollars from an ever-widening market.

The profusion of games on both a daily and weekly basis is phenomenal. Four numbers or six numbers, there are people out there who can't resist throwing their money into the pot. Then came the tri-state jackpot game. Now there's a groundswell of support building up for a national lottery.

Just to make the state lottery even more accessible, the state is about to introduce automatic betting machines at several test locations. This latter enterprise has all the earmarks of a return to the one-armed bandits called slot machines, once operated illegally hereabouts until stiff enforcement knocked them out of the picture.

Now, there are just over 4,000 lottery betting sites. In time, the automatic machines could triple the number of betting outlets. The consequence, obviously, would be to increase the volume of play to unprecedented levels.

No immense social benefit results from the lottery, although proceeds from the numbers games and from Beano furnish significant help to agencies aiding the public as well as municipalities.

Massachusetts may well reach a point where too much money is being drained from the economy. Establishment of a national lottery would be something else again. The public will go totally bonkers over such a gambling opportunity. And think of how the big spenders in Washington will welcome a new source of revenue to roll the pork barrels around while the deficit grows and grows.

Drawing the line somewhere has a lot of merit.

Wants 'heinous' 10 percent law 'eradicated'

To the Editor:
The 10% Ordinance is a heinous law and should be promptly eradicated. Its victims are the middle class, our standards of law and civilization, and our self-respect.

The supporters of this law posture high moral codes: taking from the rich and giving to the poor. Why are we taking from the family who has worked and saved and wish to purchase a home and then are told that the price is 10% higher so there can be a donation to someone else?

Secondly, this law is arbitrary. The precedent of politicians being able to demand any sum of money has already been expanded to far fewer than 10 units, and money is being demanded in exchange for variance rulings.

Lastly, to whom are the free units going? To poor elderly who cannot survive under the agenda of huge social spending for the last 40 years, that has now impoverished the whole middle class? To people who cannot afford to live in Newton and are poor? Why are the poor people more deserving than the middle income people who would like to live in Newton but cannot afford the extra 10% being charged?

This law is welcomed by politicians for three reasons: 1) it provides money, housing, favors to distribute, from which flows 2) captive constituencies, and 3) the law strikes at the middle class which is successful and autonomous, through degrading the quality of life in the city, and its codes of law and behavior.

School restructuring still up in the air

I am writing regarding the possible reopening of the Bigelow School. As a member of the Newton School Committee, I must emphasize the word "possible."

An impression may exist that it is a foregone conclusion that the Newton schools will move to a grades 6-7-8 configuration resulting in reopening Bigelow. The fact remains that to this point no debate on this topic has even occured within the Newton School Committee.

Such debate will occur within the next several weeks with advantages and disadvantages of the 6-7-8 configuration to be carefully studied.

A number of factors will impinge on the committee's final decision. It is my clear intent that the educational factor be uppermost regardless of what other factors might indicate including the factor of space in our elementary schools. Lengthy debate must take place on the educational advantages and disadvantages of changing from a K-6, 7-8 system to a K-5, 6-7-8 system. Within this debate it is critical that the emotional development of the youngsters be considered.

It does no good to argue educationally that sixth grade youngsters within a 6-7-8 configuration have greater opportunities for certain subjects than in a K-6 if the youngsters are not ready for such subjects. Nor does it help educationally of the learning environment in a 6-7-8 is not as positive as in a K-6.

One must also take into consideration whether years down the road for a youngster it really matters much whether one studied a particular subject as a sixth grader or had to wait to become a seventh grader in a junior high school.

At any rate the issues are complex. The important fact is that the Newton community understand that no decision has been made. Toward our future debate I welcome input from my constituents in Ward 4 and from citizens throughout Newton.

National target of Duke's campaign

By Robert J. Wagman

Although facing only token Republican opposition in November, Gov. Michael Dukakis is running hard. It's not that he's afraid of an upset; he is said to be hoping for national recognition and a place on the 1988 Democratic ticket.

Dukakis has amassed a $3 million-plus war chest for his '86 campaign, probably the most raised by any Democratic gubernatorial candidate besides New York's Mario Cuomo. Certainly this money is not needed for his re-election bid. His GOP opponent, businessman George Kariotis, has raised little beyond the $100,000 he donated to his own campaign.

The Massachusetts Republican party is in a state of almost total disarray. Its first choice to oppose Dukakis was state Rep. Royall Switzler, who withdrew after it was revealed his war record had been misrepresented. Then the party's second choice, Gregory Hyatt, backed out after undergoing personal scrutiny. Finally, Kariotis was chosen. He promptly startled party leaders by announcing that if elected he would appoint both Switzler and Hyatt to high state office.

But despite the assurance of victory in November, Dukakis is running a six-day-a-week campaign, making appearances all over the state. He is also helping other Democratic candidates, not only in Massachusetts but in other parts of New England as well.

One candidate benefiting from Dukakis' aid is New Hampshire Democratic gubernatorial nominee Paul McEachern, who faces the almost impossible task of unseating GOP Gov. John Sununu. On several occasions Dukakis has held fund-raisers for McEachern in Massachusetts; and Dukakis' backers are putting much-needed cash into the McEachern campaign.

To some observers Dukakis is running more against Sununu than he is against his own GOP opponent. Perhaps the most charitable way of putting it is that the two state chief executives are feuding.

A less charitable view is that the two — who are at opposite ends of the political spectrum and loathe each other — are becoming locked in an increasingly bitter environmental battle. This has both regional and possibly national repercussions.

It is hard to overstate the importance of the completed, but still unopened Seabrook, N.H., nuclear plant as a political issue in New England. It is the dominant issue in all races in New Hampshire — and in parts of neighboring states as well. A major political issue for a decade, Seabrook, a nuclear facility located close to the Massachusetts border, became the issue of 1986 after the disaster at Chernobyl.

Sununu is a major proponent of the plant. He wants to get it opened and operating as soon as possible. But he would also like to minimize it as an issue in his re-election campaign because it is perhaps the only thing that could defeat him. But Dukakis won't let him ignore Seabrook.

For the plant to get its final operating license, it must have, under federal law, an approved disaster plan. Since Seabrook sits only a few miles above the Massachusetts-New Hampshire border, that disaster plan must first be approved by Dukakis. He must also submit an evacuation plan for six Massachusetts towns and cities that are close to the plant.

Dukakis has so far refused to approve the disaster plan or to submit the evacuation plan, thus blocking the plant's opening, keeping the issue in the headlines — and enraging Sununu.

Because Sununu is so far ahead of McEachern, a Boston TV station decided to have some fun recently. It conducted a poll of New Hampshire voters asking who they would prefer to have as their governor, Sununu or Dukakis. In the heavily conservative and Republican state, Dukakis won 47 percent to 44 percent.

This little poll has national significance because New Hampshire is the host of the first major Democratic presidential primary.

In recent months, national Democratic leaders have sought to portray their party as one that makes local government work effectively. More often than not, when Democrats talk about effective state and local government, it is Dukakis who is thrust into the spotlight. Despite a citizens' tax-cutting initiative that cut state funding badly, Dukakis has rebuilt Massachusetts' economy.

There is one cloud on the horizon. A recent court decision has held that Massachusetts has been using an incorrect formula to pay welfare benefits, resulting in underpayment to recipients to the tune of about $525 million annually. If the decision is upheld, this could throw the state budget into turmoil and open Dukakis to charges of balancing the budget on the backs of the poor.

Marking Time

In praise of Joseph McDonnell

By Mark White

I've been staring out of my office window for two hours. No work. No phone calls. Just thoughts.

This morning I received a call telling me that Joe McDonnell had died.

Joe McDonnell was a former alderman who eventually became President of the Board.

Most of you probably never heard of Joe, but those of us who knew him will never be able to forget him.

How do you reconcile in your mind the loss of such a brilliant and wonderful friend at the age of 53?

You see Joe McDonnell was not just another alderman. When Joe was around, things happened. And when Joe was around, it was a thrill to be on the board.

I'd like to tell you a few things about Joe McDonnell.

When I first joined the board I was told to beware of "Captain Midnite." Not knowing too many faces on the board, I was introduced to Joe and told that he, indeed, was the infamous "Captain Midnite." I soon found out that the nickname was well deserved.

Board meetings began at 8 p.m. and most of the members would arrive straight from work after a long day at the office and no dinner.

Needless to say, people were tired and hungry.

As the night dragged, on the aldermen would become anxious to go home.

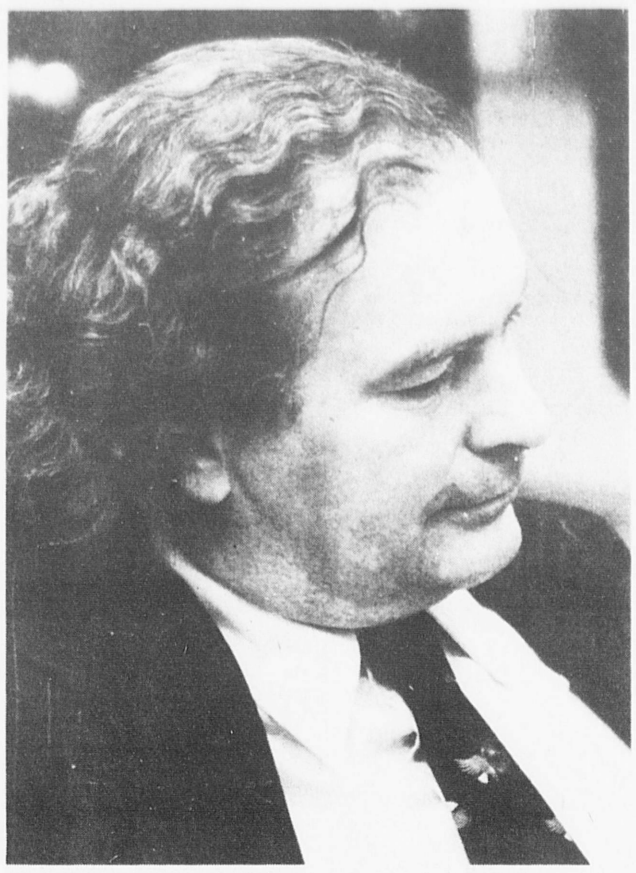
One seat was often vacant during the early part of the uneventful meeting, but it didn't stay vacant. Joe McDonnell would stroll in about 11 p.m. raring to go.

Before you knew it, he was in control of whatever debate was taking place and succeeding in totally confusing everyone on the board.

Instead of adjourning at 11:30, meetings would often run to 2 a.m.

The man was so bright and articulate you had to listen to his arguments and the more confused the situation got the more control he gained. He was the teacher and we were the students who learned from him.

Joe was not only brilliant, he was persuasive and conciliatory. He was elected to the presidency on a promise of changing some key chairmanships.



The late, great Joe McDonnell

Once elected, Joe successfully convinced his backers that those chairmen should retain their positions in order to heal the wounds on the board.

I initially objected, but, as usual, Joe won me over. And you know what? He was right. Those chairmen turned out to do an excellent job and the board functioned as well as it ever had.

Joe would often walk by without saying hello. He wasn't trying to be rude. His mind was occupied elsewhere and you knew that he really didn't see you.

Dick McGrath used to tell a story that at one meeting Joe came over to him with a committee report, pointed to it and said, "You know what's going on here, don't you? You see this. You know what's going on?" He then walked away leaving a befuddled McGrath.

When the roll call was taken McGrath voted the wrong way and McDonnell came over and said, "I told you what the problem was, how could you vote that way?" McGrath could only respond that he didn't understand what the heck Joe was talking about.

Whether it was debating an issue or satisfying aldermen about prospective committee chairmanships, Joe McDonnell was always in charge.

I guess the only thing that ever took charge of Joe McDonnell was this insidious cancer that took his life.

As I get older, I'm going to more funerals and the funerals are of people who weren't just acquaintances but were good friends. And frankly, it's tough to take.

Joe McDonnell challenged me, stimulated my mind, taught me, and befriended me.

When I was only 25, he had enough confidence in me to appoint me as chairman of a major committee. He treated me as an equal even though I knew I wasn't.

There are very few people in life to whom you can honestly point and say they had an impact on your development. For me and for numerous others, Joe McDonnell was one of those people.

No one had heard anything from Joe in recent years. We all assumed that he was continuing to use his brilliant mind for the benefit of his law firm's clients.

He would surface now and then on issues like the Hospice and Matt Jefferson's fight to retain the Presidency of the Board. But his participation in city affairs was minimal.

Nobody knew he was sick until we got the word he had passed away.

And that's what makes this so hard to take. I could have sent a card or I could have visited him, but I never got the opportunity to say good-bye.

So, good-bye Mr. President. The city is a better place because of your work and I'm a better person for having known you.

The Sandinistas are ravaging the population of Nicaragua

By Dana Smith

The political cartoon that was printed on Sept. 10 implies that there is no difference between the Communist Sandinistas and the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance.

Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Sandinistas are Communist revolutionaries, trained in Cuba, who believe in "revolution without frontiers."

Castro instructed the Sandinistas to promise democracy to the people and to create the appearance of democracy when the Sandinistas took over. Once in power, the Sandinistas moved rapidly to push democratic elements from positions of influence. In the first six months of the Sandinista regime, the FSLN had summarily executed over 2,000 people. By December, 1982, 8,655 persons had been executed for political reasons since the revolution, including 14 pregnant women.

One of the most common means of sustaining the myth of mass support is the Sandinistas' use of the rationing system. Ration cards, needed to buy necessities such as food, are confiscated for non-attendance at Sandinista meetings. In one village at a "Face the People" meeting, in which the commandandes meet with local residents, the ration cards of members of cooperatives were collected; if they did not show up their cards were not returned.

When the Church protested the conscription of Catholics into the Sandinista army, Sandinista mobs, some armed with shotguns, stormed 26 Catholic churches in Nicaragua, interrupting mass, smashing doors and windows and savagely beating several parishoners.

Christian youths who do not join the FSLN army and therefore cannot show an ID card are frequently brutalized and are punished at school.

The only synogogue in Managua was firebombed, then confiscated and turned into an elite social club for the children of the high-ranking Sandinistas.

Nicaraguan Jews have had their property confiscated, have been arbitrarily arrested and physically harassed. Seventy-year-old Abraham Gorn, president of the Nicaraguan Jewish community, was jailed and forced to sweep the streets. His factory was expropriated, his bank account seized and he was evicted from his home. All Jews have now been driven from Nicaragua.

The entire Miskito Indian leadership has been arrested; 15,000 Miskito Indians have been forcibly relocated; over 39 villages have been utterly destroyed, hundreds of Indians have been tortured, arrested and killed, and the entire Indian area has been placed under harsh military rule.

The churches of Moravians, Mormons, Baptists, Seventh-Day Adventists and Jehovah's Witnesses were confiscated after May 1982 in rapid succession. Interior Minister Thomas Borge has labeled them "enemies of the people" and claimed that "they are supported by the CIA."

During one of the raids, Candida Fernandez, 22, of Baitan, stated: "I was taken by force to the Evangelical Chapel and raped. Later that night, the military commander beat me, my house was burned, and my husband shot to death."

A major pillar of totalitarian social control is monopolization of the means of communication. Sandinista efforts to control all media and organize the population in groups under their direction began immediately after their coming to power in 1979. Nicaragua's information management apparatus is operated by the Ministry of the Interior under the close supervision and with the assistance of Cuban, Soviet, East German and other communist-bloc advisors.

Among the most important Cuban and Soviet-style means of social control are the "mass organizations" claiming to represent women, youth, journalists, etc. The most important mass organization is the network of the Sandinista Defense Committees, the CDS's. These committees, which were patterned after the Cuban Committees for the Defense of the Revolution (CDR's) are a major force for ideological education, social control and security enforcement at the neighborhood level.

Other propaganda instruments include a mass literacy campaign and the educational system. The former is mainly a vehicle to subject people, usually at the hands of Cuban instructors, to Marxist "educational" materials. Participants are also recruited into the system of secret police informers. Educational institutions are entirely controlled by the regime.

Sandinista information management extends to foreign operations as well. The New Nicaragua News Agency (ANN) was set up in 1980 on the pattern of Cuba's Prensa Latina. It has reporters in the larger Nicaraguan cities and correspondents in Washington, Miami, Los Angeles, Mexico City, Santo Domingo, Havana, Caracas and other cities in Latin America. TASS, Presna Latina, and ANN work as a unified worldwide information and disinformation network to plant stories in the foreign media that will help the Sandinistas' image and discredit their enemies.

500,000 people have fled from the communists in Nicaragua since 1979, out of a total population of 2.9 million people.

There is no shortage of people willing to fight the Sandinistas, and with adequate training and military aid from the United States, they will be able to topple the brutal communist regime and finally bring democracy to Nicaragua.

Datsun dealer caught in zoning dispute

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Alderman Polly Bryson said she has witnessed the Newton-Nissan car dealership showcasing cars last week at a lot it leases for vehicle storage in direct violation of a zoning regulation

The Ward 4 alderman said she spoke with a salesman at the Webster St. lot in the process of showing cars there.

Bryson first observed what she believed to be a couple test-driving a car there two months ago. Accompanied by a reporter, she found conditions have not changed.

Bryson was sitting in her car at the lot's entrance when a man and a young woman drove up, got out and looked at several cars.

Without identifying herself, Bryson asked the man if the dealership was offering cars there for sale. "Of course we do," he said, adding it is one of three lots the company uses.

The salesman gave Bryson his business card after she said she was looking to purchase a car for her daughter. He had to return to the Washington Street dealership, but invited the Ward 4 alderman to look at the cars herself.

"It is ongoing and to me it blatantly goes against an agreement," Bryson said later.

Her discovery may prompt the city to renew legal action against the owners, Mario and James DiCarlo, who are leasing the land to Newton-Nissan for storage.

And at least one other alderman is saying he is tempted to ask the city if it is possible to not renew the Washington Street dealership's license.

Auburndale residents living near the lot have complained that motor vehicle storage and showcasing is disruptive to the neighborhood.

City officials have said the cars and trucks should not be stored or showcased there because Newton-Nissan has no special permit for doing so.

The city took the DiCarlo brothers to Newton District Court in September, but agreed to put the case on hold while they seek a special permit for vehicle storage from aldermen.

Bryson produced a Sept. 30 letter in which Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce said he has "eyewitness information" that Newton-Nissan has been showcasing cars on Webster Street.

"If this practice continues," Peirce wrote Alan Barkin, the DiCarlos' attorney. "I will have no choice but to reopen these (court) proceedings."

Neither Mario DiCarlo nor Barkin could be reached for comment.

Contacted Thursday, Newton-Nissan General Manager Timothy Pike did not refute charges that showcasing was taking place at the lot.

"It should not be happening," he said. "We will make every step to prevent this from happening again."

Allegations that the dealership was showcasing cars on Webster Street first surfaced in August and Pike denied it was happening. Residents may have seen other dealers on the lot for purposes of car swapping, he said back then.

Alderman Richard McGrath said the whole situation is personally embarrassing to him because he defended the company at a Land Use Committee meeting late this summer.

A resident charged the company was storing cars on city sidewalks in West Newton Square, but McGrath said he counseled the committee to give Pike a chance because he is a relatively new dealer.

But McGrath later discovered the company continued the practice afterwards.

The committee license must be renewed annually and is now on hold because of those allegations.

School costs climbing

Large items in the budget, including general maintenance, transportation, gas price escalations and utilities are expected to increase almost 5 percent annually.

Special education tuition costs are estimated to increase 14 percent annually which represents the same increase as this year.

Public schools are mandated to offer special education programs, but if their programs cannot meet the needs of the student the schools are required to place the student in a private school where their needs will be properly served, according to Silluzio.

Approximately $1.6 million to place 120 students in private schools was allotted in this year's budget. It can cost as much as $50,000 to place a special needs student in a private school, Silluzio said.

Zoning battle could prompt evictions

Newtonville Ave., a rooming house across the street that would be converted to four condominiums.

Dale Myers of 367 Newtonville Ave. argued aldermen should reject the request. It "circumvents the trust some people had in zoning when they purchased their homes," he said.

But Rosenberg and Harrington said their zone change actually would not affect Newtonville Avenue, since the extra dwellings have existed since the 1940s. Rosenberg denied the owners are profit-motivated.

"They've got people living there for years and they've charged modest rents," he said. "If it's speculative to charge $400 to $500 rents ... I'd like to know what speculative is."

The real issue is that several tenants will lose their homes if the board does not act, both attorneys said. "It is the city that forced this issue," said Rosenberg. "The legal process has forced this issue."

Controversial landlord Shirley Jaffe made this clash inevitable when she charged the properties had four units in a two-family zone. Building Commissioner James Cameron later issued a cease and desist order against the two buildings after a department investigation.

The city in 1985 took Jaffe and her husband, Leon, to Cambridge District Court on the charge their 58 Winthrop St. property was a two-family dwelling in a single-family zone. Judge Arthur Sherman found the couple guilty and fined them $12,000 — a decision upheld by the state's Supreme Judicial Court.

Since her court loss, Jaffe has filed over 300 complaints of zoning and building code violations to prove the city selectively enforced the law against the couple. She has vowed to sue the city for harassment.

"Unfortunately, there are some people in our community who are sour grapes who decided to make everybody's life miserable," said Alderman Richard McGrath in an apparent reference to Jaffe. "The problem I'm going to have is, 'Write the law so it'll be equitable and they're won't be any abuse.'"

McGrath said the time is not right for a zone change that would be citywide. The board should wait until the Zoning Amendment Committee is finished with its proposal to revise Newton's zoning ordinances.

For that reason, Alderman Joshua Davidson proposed a moratorium against all evictions until aldermen decide how to deal with what could be hundreds of illegal dwellings across the city.

"We don't want to see people who've lived in our community for over 10 years out on the street," he said to about 75 people attending the meeting. "This is horrible."

But McGrath and Alderman Paul Coletti said the board cannot ask the Building Department not to enforce the law. "If that's the case, then the Jaffes' charge of selective enforcement would be legitimate," Coletti said.

"It's like telling a Police Department not to tow cars in a no-parking zone," McGrath said.

The Building Department already has closed down around 30 illegal dwellings elsewhere and the board cannot make a special case for Newtonville Avenue, Coletti said.

Alderman Bruce Carmichael noted Rosenberg and Harrington's zone change request would have ramifications citywide, but especially in his ward, which includes Newton Corner and Nonantum.

Planning Department figures show that their proposal would make it possible for 241 new dwellings if additions to single- and two-family homes were allowed in Residence D.

Carmichael disputed the notion that Curry and Perry were unaware of the illegal dwellings when they purchased the Newtonville Avenue properties.

"It's beyond me how someone could be an owner of a home and not know that illegalities exist after a proper title search," he said.

Harrington at one point asked the tenants who could be evicted to stand, a move Carmichael described as "overzealous" and "melodramatic."

At the same time, Carmichael said evicting people is not a pleasant prospect. "I don't like it," he said of the issue. "I wish it would go away."

League of Women Voters

Abortion to school aid on Nov. ballot

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Of the eight referendum questions to appear on November's election ballot, the League of Women Voters (LWV) is taking positions on five.

The League is opposed to questions one through four and is urging people to vote "no" to them on the ballot. The questions include state regulation or prohibition of abortions, government aid to private and parochial schools, the tax-cap, and hazardous waste cleanup.

The only issue the League is supporting is Question 6 — mail-in voter registration. The LWV is urging citizens to vote "yes" on this ballot question.

Last week six panelists, all of whom support the League's positions, addressed an audience of about 30 during Referenda Action Night at the United Parish of Auburndale. They explained the facts and consequences of the five ballot questions.

"We're working very hard to campaign this election year because such a light voter turnout is expected," Jane Parker, local action chairman for the Newton League said. "The intent of this session was purely educational so that voters can spread the word an make sound decisions on election day."

Ballot questions are often decided by a small majority of voters who have a stake in the turnout, Parker said. Too often, voters are misinformed or uneducated about the issues and overlook them in the polling booths she added.

Each panelist was given 10 minutes to address the question they were invited to speak on. A five minute question period was allotted after each speech.

Rep. David Cohen, D-Newton, delivered the most powerful speech in opposition to Question 2 — government aid to private schools. Cohen led the floor fight in the legislature last spring when it decided by a narrow vote to pose this question to voters again. In 1982 the question lost by an overwhelming 3:2 margin.

Cohen argues that the amendment will "deal a fatal blow to our public school system" if it is passed. He described the amendment as "broad-sweeping and scary.

"Public schools only get funding from public sources, whereas private schools also depend on private donations, endowments and tuition fees," he said.

"We are not discriminating against private schools or the Catholic Church as some proponents claim. We are opposing this to be fair to our public school system so they can still remain competitive."

If passed, the amendment could drain more than $3 million in state funds from public education, according to Cohen.

The league contends the amendment will be costly and could also threaten the independence of private schools. It was pointed out that, once private schools accept state money, they will also be subject to stringent state regulation.

Question 1, also a constitutional amendment, if approved could give state government the power to prohibit abortions, except when the life of the mother is at stake. League member Mary Adelstein, who spoke in opposition to the proposed amendment, said it is "intrusive and extreme.

"This question is seeking to mutilate the constitutional rights of women and their right to privacy and choice," she said. "It makes no exceptions for victims of rape or incest, young adolescent girls and women with serious health problems. It will take away every woman's right to choose a safe, legal abortion."

The remaining three questions are initiative petitions for a law. The questions are placed on the ballot because citizens have obtained the required number of signatures from state voters.

If these measures receive more "yes" votes than "no" votes, and also receive "yes" votes from at least 30 percent of those voting in the election, it will become law.

The league has taken the following positions on the initiative petition questions:

•Question 3, regarding a Tax cap — This petition seeks to control state spending by tying tax revenues to the percentage growth of wages and salaries and then returning excess revenue to the taxpayers. It makes no provisions for anticipated spending needs like housing, hazardous waste treatment and special education.

The LWV says the law would severely restrain the state's ability to cope with emergencies and respond to economic downturns. The League believes this petition will cripple the only level of government with the resources and will to provide services to those in need. The League urges people to vote "no" on this question.

•Question 4, regarding Hazardous Waste Clean-up — While the petition seeks to clean up hazardous waste sites in the state — something the League generally supports — it believes the plans of this petition are "impractical and unrealistic." The League urges people to vote "no" on this question.

•Question 6, regarding mail-in voter registration — the League contends this petition would make voter registration easier, more efficient and less vulnerable to fraud. Any eligible citizen would be able to register at any time or place by completing a form in the presence of an adult witness and sending it in by mail. Twenty-three states have successful mail-in voter registration, the League reports, and they urge citzens to vote "yes" on this question.

The League will not take positions on Questions 5, 7 or 8, regarding the required use of safety belts in motor vehicles, a national health program and a national acid rain control program.

"We chose the key issues we believe will have the greatest affect on a majority of individuals," Parker said. "These questions that we're not taking a position on are also not binding, which means that even if they pass, they will not become law. It's not that we don't think these topics are important — they are.

Historic buildings protected if proposal okayed

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Anyone wishing to demolish one of the city's historic buildings would have to demonstrate economic hardship if the Board of Aldermen approves a proposal backed recently by the Zoning Amendment Committee (ZAC).

Under an existing proposal, authored by Zoning Review Committee (ZRC) member Barbara Levy, the city's Historic Commission would review any plan to raze a historically significant building. The commission and residents could encourage but not compel a developer to preserve a structure.

The proposal states that any home or building the commission designates as "preferably preserved" cannot be demolished for six months or until the city determines the developer has at least tried to find a buyer willing to preserve the property.

But former alderman Terry Morris, an attorney and developer interested in preservation, urged the ZAC to require proof that preserving a structure would be economically harmful.

Most times, he said, developers would argue for the need to demolish a historic structure because of the inability to get fair value on a sale.

"I think you want to question that," Morris told the ZAC. "Who puts the value on the property? He could put a $500,000 figure on a property worth $200,000, then come back and say 'I couldn't get anyone.'"

Alderman Susan Basham agreed. A developer or landowner may want to raze an old structure because it is expensive to heat or maintain, she said. It could be in such poor condition that rehabilitating it could cost more than putting up a new building.

But Basham said she wants documentation — hard facts and figures — to prove that is so. Morris said the commission could ask an owner or developer to produce bids from contractors comparing the cost to renovate versus building a new structure.

The proposal as drafted by Levy and refined by Asst. City Solicitor Ouida Young already requires a developer to state his reason for demolishing property the commission considers historic.

Aldermen Michael Malec and William Shaevel fashioned wording — unanimously backed by the ZAC — that requires a developer to provide hard figures when the stated reason for demolition is economic.

But even if these facts show a developer does not need to raze the building, the ordinance would not prevent him from eventually doing what he wishes.

Morris asked the ZAC why it was not fashioning a stronger ordinance.

As a member of the Land Use Committee in the late 1970s, he authored a demolition proposal which the board defeated. It would have required a developer to obtain a special permit before demolishing historic property, giving aldermen police powers over Newton's historically and architecturally significant structures.

But Young said a developer who had been denied a permit could argue the city was preventing him from getting a fair economic return on his property.

Morris said requiring a special permit would force a developer to prove that is true.

Though he did not convince the ZAC to strengthen the ordinance proposal, Morris acknowledged that this is only a beginning.

"Maybe the best approach is to adopt this and then expand upon it at a later date," said Morris after the ZAC vote. "A half a loaf is better than none."

Support for parents of blind children

"He not a fantastic athlete, but he has what it takes," she said of her son. "We always told him he could do it and we worked extremely hard with him. The most beautiful thing is that the other students treat him like one of the gang. He is very popular."

One of the most important functions of the center is to help parents teach their blind children basic skills at a young age so they can be mainstreamed into regular schools. In some cases children go to special schools for the blind, but it is not always necessary, according to Charlene Labb, coordinator of the parent volunteers at the center.

"These days, the trend is to send blind students to regular schools so they are not isolated from other young people," Labb said. "We teach parents how to work with teachers to ensure they are receiving the best possible education and services."

Although the center's doors are open to all blind people and their families, it concentrates on blind children under the age of seven. In particular, it focuses on children under three, for whom the least services are available.

The most rapid growth and development of a child occurs during the first three years of life and it is a crucial time that these parents can not let slip by, said Labb.

"It's an awful feeling to be all alone and for many parents who have a blind child it is overwhelming," she said. "Once they get over the shock of it all, the next step is figuring out what to do next. No one comes into parenting a blind child with experience. It used to be done through trial and error, but now there is help for them and we encourage people to take advantage of the resource. Parenting a blind child is more than a 24-hour job."

"Parents of blind children have to teach that child everything," Raynor said. "Nothing exists in the world for a blind child except for what caring adults give them. We try to help parents and offer them suggestions of how they can teach their child to live an independent, safe life.

"Food shopping, preparation and eating are so routine for us, but for a blind child, you have to explain what you're doing and let them feel and taste things," Raynor said. "If you feed them and don't tell them what you're doing the food just appears before them. They don't know where it came from or how it got warm and softer from when the food was bought in the store."

It is not a given that blind people have stronger senses of hearing, touch and smell — it is a myth, Labb said. Those senses are strengthened only through intense training.

"These parents have to constantly stimulate all the other senses and encourage their babies to be active," she said. "They aren't born with stronger senses. They have to be trained to sharpen the senses."

The parent, she said, is the child's main teacher.

Seminar on patents Oct. 23

WALTHAM — A practical seminar on "Working With Patents" presented by patent and trade practioners for business people and engineers of all disciplines is being held in Waltham on Thursday morning Oct. 23 under the joint sponsorship of the Newton-Needham and Waltham/West Suburban Chambers of Commerce.

The seminar leaders are Thomas Hollyday, president, Holly Corp., consulting in market research and international trade and William Rowland, registered patent attorney and former chairperson of an American Bar Association subcommittee on patent legislation. Registration fee is $25.

Further information and reservation details can be obtained by contacting the Newton-Needham Chamber at 244-5300 or the Waltham/West Suburban Chamber at 894-4700.

Safety versus convenience in Highlands

"The real solution would appear to be the application of better engineering skills, experience and good judgement," Nast said. "How in God's name can they test the intersection when they closed it off, eliminating the opportunity to check it as it was first. That's the only way to identify the real problem."

Traffic Engineer Roy LaMotte said Nast's criticism of their testing method is "unfounded." A study, including traffic counts, was made at the intersection prior to its closing, he said.

"The point of temporarily closing the intersection is to evaluate the traffic impact it would have on surrounding roads," LaMotte said. "Mr. Nast would also like the speed limit reduced to 35 miles an hour on Route 9, which is both unreasonable and unrealistic."

The Woodcliff Road campaign caught the attention of both Rep. Susan Schur, D-Newton, and Alderman Rodney Barker, who lives on Woodcliff Road north of Route 9. Barker has been in favor of permanently closing the intersection, claiming it is the only viable solution.

Nast said it is easy for Barker to recommend closing the intersection because he lives on the north side of the barrier "so that the closing will affect his usual travel routine little or nothing."

Barker contends that the barrier is equally inconvenient to residents on the north side who have loop around to Centre or Parker streets to get access to Route 9 west.

"In the interest of safety, I think this has to be done," Barker said. "It has nothing to do with my personal inconvenience. We're all inconvenienced a little bit, but I think it's well worth it. It's tragic we had to wait for someone to get killed before we got anything done at that intersection."

The issue will come to a head Oct. 21 when the commission, along with the state DPW, will make it's final recommendations on whether to permanently close the median.

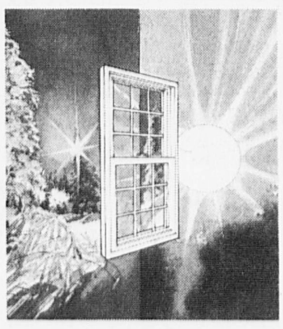
"Some windows are too cold."



North, south, winter, summer — windows made with Sunglas Heat Reflective glass work like transparent insulation to save you valuable energy dollars year-round.

Sunglas HR also helps reduce condensation and drafts to keep you more comfortable day and night no matter what the weather.

Sunglas HR is the insulator that really is a window. A high-tech glass that looks like old-fashioned clear glass, but actually reduces both heat loss and heat gain 65%* by keeping radiant heat where you want it: inside when it's cold — and outside when it's hot.

"Some windows are too hot."

In other words, with Sunglas HR your windows are never too hot, or too cold — but just right.

What's more, Sunglas HR also reduces the sun's harmful ultra-violet rays that cause premature fading of household fabrics.

*Versus single glazing. Based upon ¾" air space. Performance will change with the width of the air space.

Sunglas HR is ideal for new homes and replacement windows, even for simple add-on storm windows.

Sunglas HR also makes great energy sense for sunspaces. In fact, the larger your glass area, the more you need Sunglas HR.

Ask for Sunglas Heat Reflective glass from Ford Glass by name, because when it comes to glass that works 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, every year — Nobody outglasses Ford.

Women's health:

Clearing up myths about breast lumps

By Jane Hyman

Most women will find lumps in their breasts at some point in their lives. If this happens to you, you may react by rushing to your doctor for an examination. Or you may be afraid to, for fear of finding out it is cancer.

We all need to remember that most conditions that cause change, lumps, or pain in the breast are not cancer. And one of the most common benign (non-cancerous) conditions is what is called fibrocystic.

Fibrocystic Condition

Fifty percent of all women experience changes in their breasts — swelling, discomfort, lumpiness — which come and go with their periods. These changes are responses to normal monthly hormonal fluctuations. The responses vary, with some women discovering that the condition disappears toward menopause, and others finding that it gets worse and that some of the lumps become permanent.

For many years this lumpy condition was called fibrocystic "disease" because doctors thought it was abnormal and a risk factor for cancer. But recently-published studies show that lumpy breasts are not a disease. And women who have the condition are not at an increased risk for breast cancer. For this reason, up-to-date physicians are beginning to call breast lumpiness a fibrocystic or cystic condition.

Some women are naturally concerned that normal lumpiness may disguise a single lump which is cancerous. For this reason, if you find a dominant lump, one which stands out and does not fluctuate, you may want to see a physician experienced in benign breast problems and breast cancer. This is especially true if you are past menopause, since breast cancers are most common then. An experienced surgeon is often the best practitioner to see, since she or he has learned through surgery which kinds of lumps are benign and which are malignant.

What Doctors Can Do

The best first step is to have a needle aspiration. The aspiration can be done by a knowledgeable general practitioner or by a surgeon. The doctor will insert a fine needle into the lump. If your lump is a cyst, fluid is drawn off and the lump collapses. If no fluid can be extracted, the lump is solid and needs to be surgically removed and examined. This procedure is called a biopsy.

Your doctor may recommend that you have a mammogram, an x-ray of the breast. But it is important to know that a mammogram cannot definitely distinguish a harmless lump from a cancerous one. Only a needle aspiration or biopsy can tell you for sure.

How do you decide whether or not to have a biopsy? You should have one if:

- You are worried about a lump, whether or not your doctor thinks it is necessary. Many women have good instincts about which changes in their breasts are harmless and which are not.
- A doctor thinks, based on her or his experience, that the particular lump is suspicious or feels like cancer.
- If you have other symptoms which may indicate cancer. This includes hard, swollen lymph glands in the armpit area, a skin rash on the breast, nipple discharge, and dimpling and puckering in the skin around the nipple.
- You already have had breast cancer; your mother or sister had breast cancer before age 40; you have taken the synthetic estrogen diethylstilbestrol (DES) or menopausal estrogens; or you have had frequent, high dose x-rays which exposed the chest area to the rays. These are all factors which may increase the risk that your lump is cancerous.

What You Can Do

If your lumpiness is painful or bothers you, there are some changes you could try. These include cutting down on meat and dairy products, salt, cigarettes, and caffeine (found not only in coffee and tea, but in some soft drinks, chocolate, and many brands of painkillers and cold remedies.)

You can also supplement your diet with 400 to 800 international units of vitamin E capsules and/or 100 to 200 milligrams of vitamin B-6 daily. If you have high blood pressure, don't take more than 400 IUs of vitamin E a day.

Evening primrose oil capsules, 2 to 4 grams, also help reduce fibrocystic conditions in some women. Take them with meals to avoid an upset stomach.

Discussion Group resumes

NEWTON — The Newton Free Library's Short Story Discussion Group will resume its meetings with a new discussion leader, Diana Altman, on Monday, Oct. 20 at 7:15 p.m. at the Main Library, 414 Centre St., Newton Corner.

The Short Story Discussion Group will discover various authors' interpretations of the "human stories."

Among the authors to be read are Carson McCullers, Henry James, Kay Boyle, Rudyard Kipling and Katherine Anne Porter.

The group, led by Newton resident Diana Altman, author and teacher, will meet twice a month at the main library.

The format has been developed to stimulate ideas and to provoke discussion. The group will analyze such aspects of the short story as style, form, content, characterization and plot development.

The library has many collections of short stories that readers may borrow. For those who wish to purchase a book, a paperback is suggested: "50 Great Short Stories" edited by Milton Crane and published by Bantam Books.

The first two meetings are scheduled for Oct. 20 and Nov. 3 at 7:15 p.m. The class size will be limited. Pre-registration is required. There is no fee.

Close but no cigar for Tiger gridders

By David Cuddy
Staff Writer

NEWTON — For three weeks, it had been the big things that had killed Newton North. Saturday at Dickinson Stadium, it was a number of small mistakes and bad breaks that handed the Tigers their fourth straight loss.

Playing undoubtably their best game of the season, the Tigers came up just short of their first victory when visiting Quincy capped a 64-yard drive late in the fourth quarter to power a 19-18 victory.

The difference in scoring was a slow-motion extra-point kick by Mark Farrand late in the third quarter — a boot that just cleared the uprights and proved to be the only point-after scored by either team. But there were a number of minor keys that totaled major frustration for the Tigers in this topsy-turvy high school affair.

"Mistakes hurt us," said Newton North head coach Peter Capodilupo after the loss. "We played well and with excellent intensity, but mistakes at crucial times hurt."

There was Joe Proia's point-after pass to Steve Lawless that came three minutes before Farrand's decisive kick. Joe DeNucci had just outhustled a Quincy pursuit for a 20-yard TD and a 12-6 Newton North lead, and Proia followed that up with a strike to Lawless at the goalline after a fake-kick.

It appeared as if Lawless, who caught the pass on the numbers and fell back out of the end zone, had pierced the goalline, but officials disagreed and disallowed the two points.

"It looked like we made it," Capodilupo said. "The kids thought we made it, but what can you do?"

There were other deciding factors, like a personal penalty against the Tigers that outweighed a Quincy holding foul on the same play to keep alive the deciding drive in the last quarter.

In their previous three losses, the Tigers had been pussycats. Capodilupo had stressed the importance of hitting to his Newton North crew, and on that third-down play, aggressiveness came back to haunt Capodilupo.

"Good teams will hit and won't get the penalty," Capodilupo said. "We're not good yet. If you retaliate, which is what our guy did, than you're worse off than if you initiate."

While a handful of mistakes destroyed Newton North, Quincy's Presidents made up for theirs.

Quincy senior fullback Joe Cardarelli's two touchdowns and 78-yards rushing in the second half was devastating. His ground play earned him just over 100 yards on the day, the third straight game in which an opposing back has cleared the century mark in rushing against Newton North.

President quarterback Steve Austin was indeed a six million dollar man, completing eight of 12 second-half passes for 137 yards. His main target, halfback Joe Innello, caught four of those second-half passes for 66 yards.

Newton North had its heroes, too. A healthy combo of Mark Adams and DeNucci carved up some impressive totals, with DeNucci rushing for two long second-half touchdowns and 120 yards total.

Adams gained 51 yards on the ground in the first half, then took a supporting role in the final two quarters and finished the afternoon with 75.

Defensively, Newton North also improved. But only for one half. At intermission, the Tigers had Cardarelli right where they wanted him — 10 carries, 26 yards — and Austin wasn't worth six cents with three passes for 41 yards.

But something happened on the way to victory number one. Cardarelli tripled his production and Austin missed only four times in the second half. Quincy, which had been held to three first downs in the opening half, exploded in general and sustained scoring drives of 70, 63, and finally 64 yards.

It's back to the drawing board once again.

"It's a tough loss," Capodilupo said. "We seemed to have it under control, but I think their size started to wear us down. We're starting to come together though. I told the kids after the game that it's a shame to waste this performance."

The coach was pleased that his running game, with two healthy backs, finally showed flashes of brilliance. Defensively, the Tigers looked sound early on, although "the fact that we couldn't hold them in the second half hurts."

After a scoreless first quarter, Newton North began to show signs of life. A Quincy punt from the Tiger 42-yard line pinned Newton North deep in its own zone, and Brian Claflin stepped back to the 10-yard line three plays later to punt the Tigers out of trouble.

The snap was high and, suddenly, Claflin found himself chasing the ball back to the one-yard line, with 21 players — 11 of them foes — hot on his trail.

Without an option, the 5-8, 175-pound tackle hugged the pigskin and ran sideways along the one before darting left for the far sideline. Some 25 yards later, Claflin was diving over a pile, clearing a Quincy defender to give Newton North a first down by two short yards. If the Tigers needed a jump start, Claflin gave it to them.

The drive stalled, but not the Tigers' desire to take their first lead of the season. Two possessions later, Newton North took a 6-0 lead on 41-yard touchdown jaunt by Adams.

Following a Doug Quinn interception at the Quincy 42 on the President's first play after the kickoff, Proia just missed connecting with Milton Britton in the end zone with one second showing on the clock in the half.

The lead lasted 20 short minutes, and it wouldn't have stood that long if not for the halftime show. On Quincy's opening possession of the third quarter, Austin and Cardarelli voiced their opinions and combined to spark a 70-yard, three and a half minute drive to tie the game.

A 26-yard pass from Austin to Innelli brought the Presidents across midfield, before Cardarelli finished it off four plays later with a 26-yard burst into the endzone.

Claflin paid back Cardarelli later in the quarter, popping the ball loose of the burly fullback for an awaiting Dennis Rohanna at the President 34-yard line. The Tigers took advantage, shooting back into the lead with DeNucci's 20-yarder, his first of two TDs in the quarter.

Quincy would not be denied, rebounding from the set back to immediately put together its second long waltz and the tying touchdown, a Cardarelli three-yard haul. It was then that Farrand converted the important point-after kick, and the score would be forever lopsided.

Newton North rebounded even quicker than Quincy had, as DeNucci took off on the first play from scrimmage, rushing 68 yards pay dirt and an 18-13 lead.

The winning drive started after the team's had swapped turnovers with six minutes remaining in the game — North taking the ball away on an Evan Galanis interception, Quincy recovering a DeNucci fumble.

When the even trade was completed, Quincy moved the ball from its own 36-yard line to just beyond midfield before stalling. Facing a third and two, the Presidents took a crucial holding call, which would have backed the visitors up 10 yards and set up long yardage if not for the personal foul against the Tigers.

With new life (and a first down), Quincy smelled end zone, and the Presidents marched towards victory, with Austin finishing the honors with a one-yard plow for the touchdown with 1:55 left.

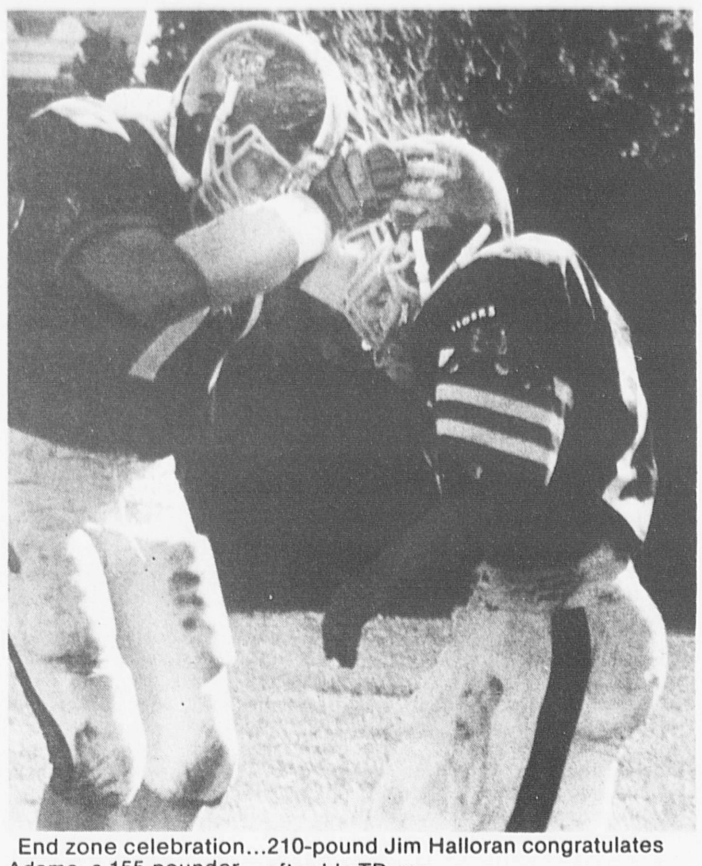
Mike Brashears' neck okay, but lineman will miss season

NEWTON — Tiger offensive guard Mike Brashears suffered a neck injury early in the second quarter Saturday against Quincy and "appears to be okay," although the 5-11, 175-pounder will most likely be out for the remainder of the season, according to Head Coach Peter Capodilupo.

On a first-down rushing play deep in the Newton North zone Brashears was apparently hit on the side of the head while blocking on the line, and the guard dropped to the field and remained there for several minutes without moving.

Brashears was taken by ambulance to Newton-Wellesley hospital, where he was kept until Monday, according to Capodilupo, for "precautionary reasons."

"It was scary," Capodilupo said of the incident. "He was just motionless there for awhile, but he appears to be okay."



End zone celebration...210-pound Jim Halloran congratulates Adams, a 155-pounder, after his TD run.

Tigers breeze to 8th win

NEWTON — "That's the way the wind blows" could have been the title for a motion picture about Monday's blustery Newton North-Waltham girls' Suburban League soccer battle.

After winning the coin toss to determine in which half they would play with the high-speed winds, the Hawks chose the second half.

Unfortunately, with the wind in Newton North's favor for the opening 40 minutes, the Tigers punched in three quick goals to set the tone. The pace slowed in the second half, and the Tigers were 3-0 winners over visiting Waltham.

"They (the Hawks) had the wind in the second half and they put some good shots on, but our keeper made some good stops and they didn't score," said Newton North coach Fuzzy Howland, whose Tigers improved their record to 8-0-1 overall.

Sharon Salter put Newton North on the board early, turning and punching home a Heather Hughes cross from inside the 18-yard line at the five minute mark. Amy Satter also assisted on the goal.

Eight minutes later, Tiffany Heanue took a tap from Ann Meng and blasted a high-lofting shot from 25-yards out that sailed into the Waltham net for a 2-0 lead.

Hughes rounded out the scoring, launching another rocket from the 25 that again blew into the net. The goal, scored with 10 minutes left in the half, was assisted by Satter and Meng.

"This was one of the better games we've played," Howland said after the win. "The overall performance of both units is getting better with each game."

The coach praised Waltham, which had bowed to his Tigers in the season-opener, 7-0.

"Waltham has improved — they played very well," Howland said. "They look a little bit more conditioned. What won the game was our depth. They just didn't have the depth."

Howland was in difficult situation defensive-wise. Both of his goaltenders, neither of which has allowed a goal all season, were on the sidelines with seperated shoulders.

After a first half in which she saw limited action, junior fullback-turned-goalie Katherine Bignati was asked to defend a 3-0 lead with the wind in her face.

"She played extremely well," Howland said of Bignati. "She had played a little bit of goal in youth soccer so she had some experience."

Bignati's big stop was a diving save off a Kim Savage corner kick that sliced in towards the goal in the second half. All told, Bignati stopped seven shots.

Howland said Bignati will most likely play Wednesday at Medford before the Tigers face a tough Peabody team. Marie Farrar, who has been out a week with the dislocated wing, should be ready for Friday's Peabody contest.

Freshman netminder Gretchen Young, who seperated her shoulder in Thursday's Cambridge game, will be lost for another week.

Tiger girl harriers shock Cambridge

NEWTON — Deirdre O'Reilly and Susan Rosser made the difference Tuesday, finishing seventh and eighth to pick up valuable points as Newton North shocked previously unbeaten Cambridge, Rindge & Latin, 26-29, Tuesday in a Suburban League girls' cross country race at Cold Springs.

O'Reilly and Rosser, North's fourth and fifth runners, edged out ambridge's number four girl, Kristen Stockard, to pick up four points and the difference between a win and a loss.

"Cambridge has four runners, and the abilty of our fourth and fifth girls to beat out their number four won the meet," said Newton North coach Peter Martin.

Clark's pair lifts Newton PeeWees

BURLINGTON — John Clark scored twice and assisted on another as the Newton PeeWees bumped off South Boston, 4-1, in a Middlesex League ice hockey game played at the Burlington Ice Palace Sunday.

Clark netted his fifth and sixth goal in only Newton's second game of the season. The 2-0 Garden City PeeWees will take on Burlington Saturday (7:40 p.m.) at the Burlington Ice Palace.

Clark gave Newton the initial lead late in the first period, then iced the game with his second goal, scoring on a breakaway with 4:33 remaining in the game to give Newton a 3-1 lead.

He sent Dennis Burke in on the Southie net with 28 seconds left in the match to close out the scoring. Burke wristed a 15-footer to the far side.

Marcello Gentile strolled in on net for a second period Newton goal. Newton goalies Marc Cappello and Steven Patriarca both had outstanding games between the pipes.

Latin sinks South swimmers

NEWTON — A Boston Latin sweep in the butterfly sank Newton South Tuesday as the Lions dropped their third straight swim meet, 94-72, to the visiting Wolfpack.

Even before the meet started Newton South led by 10 points (Latin didn't have any divers), but the Lions could not hold the lead.

Entering the washed-out diving competition, Newton trailed by eight points and was completely sunk when Latin pulled off the sweep in the next event.

The Lions were not without their own highlights, though. Sarah Lahey won the 100 freestyle and placed second in the 50 free with an impressive 28.8 finish.

Wendy Meltzer copped seconds on both the 200 individual medley and the 100 breaststroke and Sarah Stolper took a second in the 500 freestyle.

Newton Yellow Cab girl hoop tryouts

NEWTON — Tryouts began Saturday at Pine Manor College for young girl basketball hopefuls in search of a spot on the Newton Yellow Cab Junior Olympic AAU roster. Ages of the hoopsters range from 13 to 18. More than 100 girls took part in the tryouts.

Successful candidates in the 18 and under group will participate in the "Women of Excellence Tournament" to be held at Pine Manor College in Chestnut Hill. Eight all-star teams representing four states will compete in a double elimination format on Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 15-16.

Leading the Newton Yellow Cab entry into battle will be Newton North senior Wendy Rodgers. The highly thought off point guard led the Tigers to an impressive state tournament showing in 1986.

Yellow Cab women's basketball director, Ron Spinney, head coach at Winthrop High School, has put together an impressive coaching staff. The 18-player team will be led by head coach Irene Cucina of Newton North. In her inagural season, Newton North excelled in the States. Joining her will be Bernie Plansky of Wakefield.

Tryouts will continue at Pine Manor next Saturday and Sunday at the following times:

15 & under-10 a.m. to noon.
16 and nder-Noon to 2 p.m.
18 and under-2 to 4 p.m.

All young girls in the three age groups are invited to the tryouts.

Tiger harriers pound Brookline

BROOKLINE — Newton North soundly defeated Brookline, 19-41, at Brookline's 2.5 mile course Wednesday.

"Our top five finishers all were within 50 seconds of each other and that is a real good sign", said coach Dave Vona. "The team's next meet is against Cambridge who are the best in the state. We are not worried about them specifically this early in the season, we will just take it as it is, just another dual match."

NEWTON — A game such as this isn't meant to be lost. Newton South had dominated the fourth quarter, cutting the Boston Latin lead from 26-15 to 26-23 and had reached Latin's one-yard line with only 30 seconds remaining. The Lions appeared ready to score to take the lead and the game when they were called for illegal proceedure.

"Mental errors like that hurt us," an understandably disappointed Lion coach Art Kojoyian said. "We stopped them on the drive before, ran it up the field, and were ready to score and we got that penalty called on us."

The infraction pushed the ball back to the six-yard line, setting up third and goal. South quarterback Ben Burlingame was then intercepted by Latin's Kevin McGonagle, ending the Lions' comeback.

"The interception meant nothing at that point," Kojoyian said. "We had first down on the two, four cracks at running it in and didn't. We dominated the entire game and lost."

"Our games with Newton South are always a wild affair," Latin coach Paul Costella said. "Always high-scoring and close. We could have very easily lost."

Boston Latin would have no doubt lost without quarterback Pat McKeigue, who was awesome at times, throwing for 269 yards and three touchdowns. He lead them from an early 15-6 deficit to the 26-15 lead. He hooked up with end Ed Burley nine times for 209 of those yards and two touchdowns.

"Pat really played well," said Costella said. "He had a really great touch with the wind."

The Intowners struck first with McKeigue providing the firepower. They halted South on its first drive, and Latin started its own drive on its 29-yard line. Five plays later they were at the Lion 45 and Mckeigue unleashed his first bomb, connecting with Burley down the sideline for 34 yards and first down at South's 11. McGonagle ran it in from there with 4:53 remaining in the first and the Wolfpack led, 6-0.

The Lions then began to employ their powerful running game which would plague Latin throughout the game. After a touchback on the kickoff, South ran the ball 17 straight times, driving to the Wolfpack one-yard line. Backs T.J. Rhone and Darryl Moran shouldered the bulk of the Lions' running of the game, finishing with 165 and 95 yards, respectively. Rhone ran it up the middle for the touchdown with 7:52 left in the half, and the Lions took the lead 7-6 when Burlingame kicked the point-after.

Latin's next drive stalled, and after the punt South began running Rhone and Moran again as they carried nine times. The drive began at the NS 30 and climaxed when Moran carried it in from 10 yards out with 2:44 left in the half. The two-point conversion was added when Burlingame completed a pass to Jeff Brewington in the corner of the end zone. The Lions had a 15-6 lead and appeared ready to roll.

McKeigue got hot on the next drive, though, and he didn't cool off until the fourth quarter, when the Wolfpack ran the ball, trying to waste time. Latin ran a few times to its 23-yard line, and on third and 12 he completed a 21-yard pass to Burley. After an incomplete pass he completed a 16-yarder to Mike Weekes in the middle, and finished the drive with a 40-yard heave to Burley, who made a fantastic catch in the end zone with only seven seconds left in the half. Latin cut the lead to 15-14 when Burley caught a pass for a two-point conversion.

Boston Latin went nowhere on its first drive of the second half, but when it halted South on fourth down at the Wolfpack's 21-yard line, McKeigue went to work again. On third and six, he completed a 35-yard toss to Burley at the Lion 40. On the very next play he threw a 40-yard touchdown pass to McGonagle with 2:52 left in the third quarter. The Wolfpack led, 20-15.

The Lions were halted again on their next drive and once more McKeigue struck. The Lions had punted to the Latin 38, and after an incomplete McKeigue connected with Burley again, this time for a 62-yard touchdown and a 26-15 lead wih 47 seconds left in the third quarter.

"Our defense was there on every pass; we just let their receivers get by us. Outside of his passing we dominated the game," Kojoyian said of McKeigue's exploits.

South looked especially immobile on its next series of downs, as two incomplete passes, two penalties, and a sack prevented them from gaining much ground. They received a reprieve, however, when Latin fumbled on the next series, and it was a huge momentum swing. The Lions took over at their 43 and drove to the BL 30. The next play was a run for Rhone, who broke about six would-be tacklers and scored with 5:02 left in the game. Burlingame's second pass to Brewington for the conversion cut the lead to 26-23.

The Lions were now fired up, and stopped Latin on three plays. After the punt they drove to the Wolfpack 28, where the drive appeared to stall. On fourth and eight, with 1:34 left, Burlingame rolled to his left. With his receivers covered, he ran it himself, carrying it for 13 yards and a first down at the 13.

Rhone carried twice for a first down at the two with 1:04 left. He was halted at the one on his next carry, though, and on the next play the Lions were assessed the proceedure call. The interception by McGonagle erased South's chances of pulling out the decision.

Tiger stickmen nipped

NEWTON — Bad luck hounded Newton North on the quest for its second win, as visiting Bedford capitalized on a penalty shot to take a 1-0 victory from the Tigers.

Newton North coach Andrea Muccini said the breaks haven't been going the Tigers' way, and she couldn't have been more right Tuesday.

Newton goalie Felicia Moschella made a save with 15 minutes left in the game, but the ball stuck in her pads and Bedford was awarded the penalty shot.

"It was a lousy break," Muccini said of the goal. "The game was pretty even, although Bedford did outplay us in the second half."

Muccini said Newton North had chances to score, but could not finish off the plays.

"Our forwards were very flat," she said. "We weren't hungry for the net. We had several opportunities inside the circle, but nothing would go in."

South loses

First-place Wayland scored four goals in each half to dump last-place Newton South, 8-0, in a game played in Newton.

An overmatched Lion squad did have a few chances to score, but failed to convert. Senior Sheilla Wilcox broke in alone on the Wayland net but missed her shot.

2nd-half Lincoln-Sudbury rush humbles Newton South girls

NEWTON — A toned-down offense and an unusually bad second half cost Newton South a 3-0 decision to visiting Lincoln-Sudbury in a Dual County League matchup on Wednesday.

The home-team Lions battled almost even with L-S for a half, trailing just 1-0 at intermission, but the Warriors took advantage of what South coach Chuck Hurwitz said were "little mistakes."

"The kids played hard," Hurwitz said of his Lions, "but we've played stronger in the second half all year long.

"Last time out, we took a 1-0 lead on them and lost in the second half because we were not conditioned. That wasn't the case today. It was just little mistakes."

Hurwitz said an unaggressive offensive attack also contributed to the shutout loss. The Lions were not without their standout players, though.

Midfielder Kathy McBride "played phenominal. She won all her battles." Sweeper Cindy Dockser saved a Lincoln goal off a mad scramble in front of goalie Dede Theodore by rushing into a crowd and booting the ball into the clear.

Hawks triumph

Attackers Lynn Dempsey and Kim Savage scored a pair of goals and converted fullback Lisa Champagne added a solo score as Waltham breezed past Quincy, 5-0, Thursday in a night soccer game played at Leary Field.

The Hawks took a 5-0 lead at the half before moving its fullback line to the forward line. Once there, Champagne popped one home.

Brockton sisters trip Tigers

NEWTON — Tricia and Noreen Solakoff combined for five first-place finishes Wednesday as undefeated Brockton clocked previously unbeaten Newton North, 99-73, in a battle for the Suburban League title.

Tricia won both the 200 and 500 freestyle while sister Noreen took victories in the 200 individual medley and the 500 freestyle. The pair combined with two other Boxers for a victory in the final relay.

Newton North's Nancy Connolly, a senior, turned in personal-best times in winning the 50 freestyle (26.7) and the 100 backstroke (1:07.84). Sophomore Jenny Hagar won and posted her best time in the 100 breaststroke (1:14.35) and finished second in the 200 IM.

The 4x100 relay team also turned in a personal-best time, but lost the race despite that.

Newton North will swim against Weymouth North on Wednesday at home.

Waltham wins

Junior Heidi Chiasson won the 50 and the 100 freestyles and anchored the winning medley relay team as Waltham defeated Weymouth North, 94-71.

Waltham took the lead early and had the meet won three quarters of the way through when Julie Bolles won the 500 and Annmarie Mazzochi took second in the race. The pair had combined for another 1-2 earlier in the meet, with Mazzochi winning the 200 just ahead of Bolles.

Laura Daley won the breaststroke and tied in the 200 individual medley for Waltham.

The 1-3 Hawks will face Brookline on Friday at Brandeis.

Tips on decorating your home

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Many families who are planning a new kitchen or bath use the glossy color pages of home decorating magazines for ideas. But before you fall in love with — and decide to duplicate — that pretty kitchen, check to make sure the room will perform as well as look pretty.

Sometimes, says Francis Jones, executive director of the National Kitchen & Bath Association, good looks are only skin deep. At a recent symposium on kitchen and bath design, he gave some tips to help consumers evaluate the pictures they see in the magazines. Mentally walk through a magazine kitchen, he suggested, and imagine preparing a meal in the room to see if it is as efficient as it looks.

According to Jones, common design flaws include refrigerator doors that open into walls, wall ovens that are mounted too high to be safe, lack of counter space where it is needed, intrusive center islands and traffic patterns which interrupt the work flow.

"The use of professional equipment — a supposed plus — can also present problems in the residential kitchen since such equipment often requires special ventilation, plumbing or utility lines." Improper installation will create more problems than are solved by the use of these fashionable appliances, in his opinion.

— At least some uninterrupted counter expanse should be included and there should be counter space adjacent to the range, oven, sink and dishwasher.

— The dishwasher should be close to the sink and far enough away from other appliances and cabinets to allow for unobstructed loading and unloading.

— There should be plenty of leg room under dining areas in counters, peninsulas and bars.

— Placement of ovens should be at eye-level or below for safety and there should be adjacent counter space on which to place hot pots and pans.

— Aisles should be wide enough for two people to pass; no household traffic through the work triangle between stove, sink and refrigerator is a good rule.

Above is an example of the many styles of kitchens. If you plan to remodel your kitchen, you should check to make sure the room will perform as well as look pretty.

According to Jones, sales of remodeled kitchens and bathrooms have been on an upward spiral since 1983. Although the bath has replaced the kitchen as the most often remodeled room, both are popular home improvements, he said, predicting that some 12 million new kitchens and baths would be added by the end of 1986.

Approximately 300 members of the National Kitchen & Bath Association participated in a geographic study of consumer preferences. The results disclosed some national trends, with a few regional variations.

Traditional wood cabinetry is the overwhelming choice in cabinetry, but the sleek look of European-style laminate cabinets was a strong second in all regions.

Countertops in most kitchens are likely to be plastic laminate while flooring materials may be ceramic tile, vinyl sheet or wood, in that order.

Light tones, especially almond and white, and natural woods are preferred in most areas of the country and in baths the preference for either white or almond was very strong, with gray a third choice.

Kitchen designers from various regions noted that color trends are related to climate, geography and culture. In the Northeast where a cool climate predominates for most of the year, clients tend to select warm colors. Colonial-style design, which ties in with local history, is also a preference.

In the South, light airy colors and easy-care laminates are preferred. However, the indigenous cypress wood is also popular. Ceramic tile, a characteristic material in hot climates, is often chosen in both the Southeast and the Southwest.

The Midwest is a conservative area where a cold winter climate is an incentive to select bright, light colors. Speakers tied the popularity of oak to the Scandinavian heritage of many in the region.

Regardless of geography, most remodeled kitchens include built-in cooking appliances. Only 20 percent of Northeast homes and 10 percent in other regions had freestanding stoves. In all areas, kitchen cabinets fitted with special storage accessories such as roll-out racks and trash containers are popular.

Comments about bathrooms indicated that few families opt for bidets. They are most often specified in the West and Southwest where approximately 10 percent of homes are so equipped. Whirlpool tubs are most popular in the Southwest where they represent half of all reported baths. Separate showers and tubs are unusual everywhere, but more prevalent in the South and West.

Setting up a home exercise area

By The Associated Press

Is last Christmas' stationary exercise bike sitting in the middle of your bedroom or family room, a mute reminder of good intentions not carried through?

Does a session on the exercise mat lead to a half-hour hunt for weights, mat and audio or videotape?

You can banish these symptoms of an unplanned existence by setting up your own home exercise area. Assuming you don't live in a shoe box, chances are you will be able to find some extra space.

Places to look, say interior designers, include a spare bedroom, a corner of the family room, a portion of a basement that can be reclaimed with new flooring and lighting, even a closet to store the equipment and the space immediately in front of it for the workout.

Consider also a corner of the bedroom in which it's possible to screen the equipment when not in use. Large bathrooms also are an option.

A good first step is to make a list of the equipment you want and need. Most floors will easily accommodate a stationary bike and rowing machine, but if large heavy plug-in machinery is part of your plan, check to make sure the floor will bear the weight. A local building inspector can probably suggest an engineer who can give an opinion.

The equipment manufacturer and retailer should provide specs on machinery weight and requirements. In an apartment house, the superintendent or building manager should be notified. You should also make sure the equipment you order will do the job you want and that you know how to operate it.

The key to creating a home exercise area should be easy maintenance. Select a floor covering that wears well and requires little care. Both resilient vinyl with a no-wax finish and flatweave carpeting are good choices. Make sure that both have no lifted edges that could cause someone to trip and avoid slippery floors that could lead to a fall.

If fabrics are involved, absorbent materials such as terry cloth will provide a comfortable surface on which to rest a sweaty body. Natural fiber cotton is a good choice because it allows the body to "breathe" and is cool to the touch.

Create a storage system for exercise accessories such as wrist weights, jump ropes and barbells.

A little flea market of their own

By Staci Milbouer
Nashua Telegraph

HOLLIS, N. H. (AP) — As time goes by, the rolltop desks that used to be found in abundance in American office buildings are becoming treasured antiques — especially when Teri Browning and Jim Johnson get their hands on them.

The couple specialize in restoring antique office furniture and selling the fruits of their labor at their small shop called The Re-Store on Route 111.

The golden-hued rolltop desks and sturdy oak filing cabinets made 100 years ago can be seen looking like new on the lawn in front of their shop.

Inside, the subtle smell of varnish hints at the hours upon hours Browning and Johnson spend taking apart furniture and restoring it to as close to the original condition as possible.

They have had the business for two years, but their interest in antique furniture goes back further than that.

Browning, a New Hampshire native, said she's been restoring furniture most of her life, but took her "first and only" job with a computer company about five years ago. She worked there three years and decided "enough was enough," it was time to go back to furniture.

Along the way, however, she met Johnson, who worked at the same computer company after serving in Vietnam. "We met at work," Browning said with the shadow of a grin crossing her face, "and we left together, too."

"If you're looking for measurement — the talent is Teri," said Johnson, who also had an interest in antiques.

Johnson decided to give up his 12 years in the computer industry and try his hand at restoring full time — thus The Re-Store was born.

Originally, however, the couple did not sell furniture out of the shop, but used it as a location for their restoration work.

On Sundays in the summer, they used to take apart a desk, load it on a truck, take it to a flea market, assemble it again and try to sell it.

One day when they couldn't make it to the flea market they put a desk on the front lawn and sold it immediately. No more road trips to sell their wares. "Now we have a little flea market of our own," said Bronwing. "For years people told us that this wasn't a good location for a shop, that others had failed here, but it's been great for us."

While rolltop desks and other vintage office furniture is their specialty, they do restore other antiques. They draw the line on anything made in the last five decades.

They primarily work with turn-of-the-century pieces. "The public really puts us in that direction," said Johnson.

But at the heart of their business and the heart of their hearts is the graceful, curving rolltop. Johnson, the fornmer computer engineer, refers to them as "antique PCs." He explains how the rows and rows of pigeon holes and slots built into the desks made it easy to organize data in the form of papers and letters. "They knew what they were doing when they made these," said Browning, gently patting an S-top desk in the corner of the shop.

The average rolltop, according to Browning, weighs about 300 pounds and takes 20 to 30 hours to restore.

Handmade quality rolltops were produced in American factories beginning in the 1860s.

"They weren't considered popular," said Broniwng. "They were just considered to be office furniture and they were thrown out eventually. That's what makes them so rare."

Rolltops didn't gain their popularity as collectible antiques until the 1960s and the more people buy them, the more valuable they get.

Prior to that time, the desks were just considered to be "big and clumsy," said Johnson.

The couple said that their customers are often professional people with children, because the sturdy desks and other furniture, mostly American-made, stand up under family use.

Browning and Johnson said they get a lot of the furniture they sell from houses up north. Antique dealers looking for vintage glass or other items will act as "pickers" for those dealing in furniture, and will tip them off to interesting pieces they have seen stashed in someone's attic or barn.

"That's how a lot of antiques come into the market," said Johnson. "People move from a larger house to a smaller one. They pass furniture on through the families. But the stuff is getting scarcer and scarcer. A lot of the farmhouse treasures get shipped out to California and Texas where they get a bigger price.

"This is the first season it's getting difficult to buy pieces. We want the real thing, not reproductions."

They say there was a time when office buildings in this country were filled with row after row of what today are valuable antique rolltop desks — desks that people took for granted as their working cubbyhole.

Browning and Johnson agree that viewing a piece of furniture as an antique can be a matter of perspective.

"A woman thought it was hysterical," said Browning, "that her daugther had an antique icebox in her living room. To her, it was like seeing a Frigidaire there."

'Drugbusters' at high school Oct. 16

NEWTON — Hundreds of fourth, fifth and sixth grade students from the Newton area and their parents are expected to attend a special "Drugbusters" program on Thursday, Oct. 16, 7:30 p.m. at the Newton North High School.

Now in its second year, the collaborative "Drugbuster" effort by WBZ-TV and the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs is designed to open communication about drug and alcohol abuse between elementary school children and their parents.

The one-hour program will be hosted by WBZ-TV 4's Chris Conangla and Patrick Hamilton of the Governor's Statewide Anti-Crime Council.

The presentation features skits performed by the Puppet Trio on peer pressure, drug abuse and family communication. Following each skit, the audience will be invited to respond to the questions and issues raised.

The "Drugbusters" program was prompted by a state-sponsored survey of 5,000 high school students from across the Commonwealth. The survey revealed that 60 percent of the students had used drugs and that nearly 30 percent of those students first tried drugs at the age of 12 or younger.

The presentation is designed as a "first step" to promote parent/child communication on the topic of drug and alcohol use and to diminish denial of the drug problem so that communities can pull together and work towards a long term solution.

"Drugbusters" is presented in the evening to allow parents to attend the program with their children. For more information about the upcoming "Drugbuster" program, contact Nancy DiMella at 552-7735.

Conservatory students to perform at The Mall

NEWTON — The sounds of Mozart, Duke Ellington and Bach will fill the air at The Mall at Chestnut Hill beginning tomorrow, as The Mall salutes the 116th anniversary of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Honors ensembles, representing the best of the musical talent available at the conservatory, will perform each Saturday and Sunday from Sept. 27 through Oct. 19 at 2 p.m. in the Center Court of The Mall.

The Conservatory's Honors Ensembles are elite groups of students, chosen by conservatory faculty each year to represent the school at musical events throughout the country and the world.

They are chosen on the basis of originality of material, cohesiveness of sound, and technical skill. This year's winners, picked after a lengthy judging process, can be heard at The Mall playing music from a variety of formats, ranging from jazz to chamber music to dixieland.

The first of the conservatory groups to appear at The Mall will be a woodwind quintet on Saturday, Sept. 27 from 2 to 4 p.m. The musicians in the quintet play oboe, flute, clarinet, French horn and bassoon — and will perform the music of Handel, Mozart and Bach.

On Sunday, Sept. 28 from 2 to 4 p.m., classical pianist Kenneth Kenter will perform. Kenter was awarded the 1986 Artists Diploma from the conservatory. This diploma is the highest honor given by the conservatory, and entitles its recipient to tuition-free school for a year.

WCRB-FM will be celebrating the conservatory's 116th anniversary simultaneously, with a radio tie-in promotion.

Doll house and miniatures on display

NEWTON — A doll house and authentic handmade miniatures for doll houses will be displayed during a discussion "Making Miniatures" by Geneva Norton of Newton, Wednesday, Oct. 22 at 7:30 p.m. at the West Newton Branch of the Newton Free Library, 492 Waltham St., West Newton.

"Making miniatures is the third biggest hobby in the world, next to stamps and coins," says Norton, who grew up in Maine and says she never had a doll house as a child.

"I've raised a family, worked in a bank, I sew and braid rugs, but this is the most rewarding thing I've ever done in my life," says Norton. "There is so much stress. The world is changing so fast and I hate it moving so quickly," says Mrs. Norton.

Different approaches to first rung of career ladder

By Joyce Picard, M.Ed.

Sue, fresh out of college, ambitious, raring to get into a marketing position meets a brick wall. John, burned out as a social work professional, his eye on a training position in industry, has amassed 50 rejection letters. Marge, a high school English teacher of 10 years, targeting technical writing is told she lacks experience. Ginger, re-entering the work world after 15 years community work, wants a challenging and stimulating position in public relations.

These people have one thing in common, they all face the challenge of breaking in. Although opportunities are going begging in retail sales and fast food, and certain industries like banking are booming at entry level, a professional level job on a career ladder is quite another story. Professional level positions in marketing, human resource management, communications, administration, are available but for the experienced. The unwritten message? Inexperienced need not apply.

To be a credible candidate in today's job market requires more than a degree. Managers, before they hire, look for relevant experience and references, looking first within their own organizations for promising candidates. To quote Betty Harragan, author of Games Mother Never Taught You, "Companies are looking for someone who already knows how to perform."

The Catch-22 is how to get experience for the higher level job. Put another way, how does one get on the career ladder?

Let's take a look at some different routes:

The Support Route

Support positions are just what they say, support to management or other professional personnel in the organization. Support positions require competency in keyboard and computer skills, at the very least. In larger organizations these positions may range from 100 percent clerical to, at the highest support level, positions incorporating some management level tasks. In smaller organizations it is not unusual for support positions to include the full range of tasks in one job. Not uncommon within many of the larger companies are pathing ladders in the support or non-exempt categories. The trend in many metropolitan areas, where competition for professional level jobs is high, is to recruit for non-technical professional positions from this level. Betty Harragan calls this, "Taking a job and turning it into something."

Temp Work

Temp work, also a support route, offers a paid approach to sampling a variety of work environments without prolonged commitment. Acquiring industry knowledge, sharpening skills, gaining office savvy, new contacts and increased confidence are useful rewards. In addition, the temp worker can gain a current work record and learn much regarding the culture of different work settings. Temping is a good introduction to getting to working on time, sitting at a desk for hours and using multiple phone buttons.

Although temp work has its down side, when the job search at the professional level gets rough this approach to staying in the main stream is worth looking at. Informal surveys show that many supervisors and middle managers came in the door as temp workers, a good reminder when enthusiasm for this route wanes.

Key in the support route is targeting work in an occupational area or industry of choice. Assignments with a marketing group or human resource management team can provide the knowledge for that competitive edge at a later point. More than one marketing department secretary has become the planning professional for company meetings.

The Internship

Along with being able to carry a brief case a bit sooner, a properly designed and supervised internship provides a real exposure to the tasks, responsibilities and pressures that exist at the professional level. That "I can do feeling" that follows is a must for confidence building. The internship also provides an opportunity for portfolio building and the acquisition of current references at the professional level.

The level of the internship, professional entry or supervisory, and the work setting is best worked out with a competent career or placement counselor (preferably one with industry knowledge). Professional career guidance is essential and can make the difference between frustration and satisfaction in the end.

Internships frequently lead to jobs. In addition high performing interns are often drawn into the supervisor's network and gain an inside track on the hidden job market we have heard so much about. Internships are the route to contacts. There are lots of true stories of people who got connected to their first professional level job through internships.

Acquiring hard skills needed in the "business" world is the first step in the internship route. Keyboard skills whether typewriting or computer literacy are basic tools for communicating. Quantitative skills or simply put, basic math, is essential in administrative, marketing and even personnel areas. Using calculators makes it easy. Simple accounting combined with a logical and analytic mind can be enough for an internship in compensation in personnel management. Good writing skills plus some word processing know-how may be enough for a technical writing internship.

Basic competency in skills such as keyboard, accounting and computer applications are the easiest to come by. It is the soft skills such as tact, attention to detail, the capacity to prioritize, and professional demeanor that take a lifetime to acquire.

Targeting a professional level position without having credibility or experience may mean many months in the job search with a low probability of success. On the other hand, acquiring skills to move into the job market in a support capacity may be a wise approach if a quick job is the goal.

If determined to move into the job market at a professional level then the internship vehicle is a proven route for gaining credibility, contacts and references and, therefore, shortening the job search.

If a good job is the goal, determine the best route and go for it. Critical to the success of any route is, of course, a positive attitude.

(Joyce Picard, M.Ed., N.C.C., was Senior Career counselor and director of Field Placement at Continuum, a career education school in Newton, Mass. She is a guest lecturer at Northeastern University, part-time faculty at Katherine Gibbs College and is a career counseling practitioner at Career Counseling Associates in Newton.)

New Rep to present 'The Dining Room'

NEWTON — "The Dining Room," A. R. Gurney Jr.'s stylish satire on the decline of the American gentry, opens the New Repertory Theatre's third season on Oct. 24 and runs through Nov. 16. The New Rep, a professional theatre-in-residence at the Newton Arts Center, is located at 61 Washington Park, Newtonville.

Hailed by the New York Times as "funny, rueful and very moving, "The Dining Room" presents an album of sharply drawn vignettes of upper-middle-class life. Parents, children, friends and servants reappear throughout the play, as families gather for holiday rituals, birthdays or dinner parties. Young and old alike grapple with life's small and large ironies in a room where the past mingles with the present.

Six actors portray 57 different characters in this wonderfully theatrical tour-de-force. Scenes blend fluidly, moving from the depression to the present, as Gurney, former Newton resident and one of America's leading contemporary playwrights, chronicles a vanishing way of life.

"The Dining Room" is directed by Newton native, Laurie Zallen, who has performed and directed throughout the Boston area. Ms. Zallen's 1985 production of "Talking With" was named one of the year's Top Ten plays by both The Boston "Phoenix" and the "Herald." The Boston Theatre Critics Circle singled out "Talking With" as the outstanding production of the year.

The New Rep, one of Boston's fastest emerging theatre companies, has a special vision. Founded in 1984, the company is dedicated to establishing a permanent theatre center in which company and community can engage in a vital dialogue. Following a highly successful season that included such diverse works as the post-Holocaust drama, "The Workroom;" Shakespeare's classic, "As You Like It;" and Alan Ayckbourn's hilarious farce, "Relatively Speaking," The New Rep offers an equally exciting program for its 1986-87 season. In addition to "The Dining Room," productions will include "Hello and Goodbye," a drama of family struggle, by South Africa's great playwright, Athol Fugard; a modern comedy yet to be announced; and the Boston premiere of the captivating Irish political musical, "Spokesong."

"The Dining Room" opens Friday, Oct. 24. Curtain time is 8 p.m. Fridays, 5 and 8:30 p.m. Saturdays, and 2 p.m. Sundays (no 5 p.m. performance Oct. 25). Additional performances are scheduled for 8 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 2, and a special Actors' Benefit, 2 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 16. Tickets are $10 (Fridays at 8 p.m., Saturdays at 8:30 p.m.); $8 (Saturdays at 5 p.m., Sundays at 2 p.m.); $2 discount at all performances for seniors and students with ID. Subscriptions are also available at a reduced rate. For reservations, special group rates and directions, call 332-1646.

Youth accused of taking charity funds

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — A Newton youth was caught by an officer for reportedly stealing a Jimmy Fund donation can from Walnut Foods on Lincoln Street last Sunday afternoon, police said.

The officer reportedly saw one youth with a group of friends stuffing something down the front of his pants while walking down Lincoln Street. When the officer stopped the youths, he found the Jimmy Fund can inside the Newton youths pants. Two of the three youths ran away, leaving the Newton youth behind, police said.

The can with the money was returned to the store and the boy was brought home to his parents. No arrest was made. The youth reportedly told police his Waltham friend was the one who stole the can.

All-night parking ban begins on Nov. 1

NEWTON — Police Chief William F. Quinn announced that during the remaining days of October, night police officers will be issuing notices to all-night parkers that, as of Nov. 1, all night parking will be a violation for which all motorists who leave their motor vehicles on the streets overnight, will be tagged.

A recent change in the year-round all night parking ban now allows night parking from May 1 to Oct. 31. On Nov. 1 the city's all night parking ban goes into effect and remains in effect until April 30.

Quinn warns all residents to make proper arrangements now so that no cars will be left on the street when the all night parking ban goes into effect.

With the coming of the snow season it is imperative that all vehicles be removed from the streets to allow snow plows to clear and maintain the streets.

During more moderate and summer weather night parking does not present the same types of problems.

The ordinance reads: "Except during the months of the year from May 1 through October 31, it shall be unlawful for the driver of any vehicle other than one acting in an emergency to park such vehicle on any street, way, highway, road, parkway or private way, dedicated or open to the use of the public for a period of time longer than one hour between the hours of 2 and 6 a.m.

Beginning the first of November cars parked all night on the street will be tagged. Chief Quinn stated, "We hope our neighbors will observe the parking ban and avoid the tickets. Last year it was necessary to tag hundreds of cars at night. We hope this can be avoided this year." The chief stressed that the goal of the police department is to have residents comply with the law voluntarily rather than pay fines for violating the law.

Keeping abreast of credit card finance rates

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

While interest rates on credit-card purchases have finally dropped at some banks, the finance charges you pay on any given set of transactions could well be going up sharply.

Depending on the mathematics, you could pay two or three times as much interest on one card as on another, even though both charge the same annual percentage (APR). Issuers of credit cards are obliged by law to explain the math, but their explanations are sometimes beyond comprehension.

The crucial variable is the interest-free grace period, if any, on your purchases. All credit-card issuers once gave a free ride of as many as 60 days to those who paid in full. If you made a partial payment, finance charges would be assessed only against the unpaid balance. But only a handful of large card issuers still use this method.

To collect more interest without raising its rates, your bank may now cancel your free ride on future transactions if you haven't paid the entire last bill. You can still avoid finance charges on past purchases, but you pay interest on the unpaid balance and all new purchases. This is the free-ride method employed by about half of all bank cards.

About 20% of bank-card issuers have stiffened rules even more by cancelling your free ride on the previous month's purchases as well as future transactions if you don't pay off everything at the end of the month (the retroactive balance method). Many states, including California, Florida, Illinois and Texas, allow retroactive interest, and this billing practice is spreading.

Finally, about 15% of bank-card issuers give you no free period on any of your purchases. Interest is inescapable, beginning the moment you hand your card to a shopkeeper or else the day the bank enters that purchase on your account. If you buy early in your monthly billing, you accumulate weeks of interest fees while waiting for your statement.

Most cardholders are understandably confused about such computation methods. If it weren't so complicated, it wouldn't be so easy for institutions to pick the terms most advantageous to them.

Grilling the banks

If you discover that your bank card charges interest retroactively or from the day of purchase, consider switching to one that will always give you grace time. Call credit-card-issuing banks and ask whether they offer an interest-free period.

Some banks won't divulge the terms of their credit agreement until they approve your credit application and send you a card.

THE SINGLES ADVISOR

RAYMOND J. CABOT, LCSW

Attempts to help friend may be waste of everyone's time

The Singles Advisor
By Raymond J. Cabot, LCSW

Dear Ray,

My own social life seems to be going pretty well. I've started an intimate relationship with a man who is intelligent, charming, sensitve, a marvelous lover and he has a lot of other positive qualities.

When my husband and I split up two years ago, I didn't know that finding a compatible man was supposed to be a problem for middle-aged women. I just tried many ways of meeting people, read a number of books about "singlehood" issues and concerns and eventually met this special man.

My problem is one of my girlfriends. Lisa and I have been friends since our college days. She went through a divorce five years ago and still hasn't met someone with whom she can form a relationship. She states that this is what she really wants, but that it hasn't happened for her as yet.

Lisa is quite attractive, intelligent, shapely, has a good career and she is an interesting and sincere person. However it seems that no matter what I suggest as a way of meeting men she rejects it. For example, when I suggest singles groups she says that the people in these groups are losers. When I suggest singles dances she says that all the men just stand around. When I suggest dating services she says that they are too expensive and don't provide results. When I suggest personal ads shw says that they don't work. I would really like to help Lisa, by I don't know what else I can do and I feel like I have let her down.

N.C., Needham

Dear N.C.,

An axiom that I coined recently is "Virtue is its own punishment." How often in doing a good deed or trying to help someone else do we find our virtuous action backfiring?

What you have done is to exercise control over you own social life. Apparently you made it a priority to learn, practice and to take positive actions to find what you wanted. People can usually understand these concepts when it comes to career goals or education or other parts of their lives. However, when it comes to one's social life, people often find it easier to just complain that to apply reasonable approaches to solving a problem.

Lisa may really believe that she wants to find someone, but this may be merely an intellectual form of denial. For five years she has been saying that there is no suitable way of meeting men, and I'm sure, saying that there were no suitable men for her as well. From her perspective, she is correct. No way and no man will be acceptable to her. This period of five years has been preceded by perhaps many years of a poor relationship with the man she was married to before divorcing. It should not be too surprising to anyone that the projection of a negative attitude and negative belief system to the singles world will result in a self-fulfilling prophecy. She will continue to experience only negative reinforcement.

She might learn from your experience, but it appears that she has chosen to ignore and deny what you have done. You can continue to frustrate yourself by trying to help someone who emotionally rejects your help or you can recognize what is happening and get on with your own life. You can continue to be her friend and to be close, but you might want to discontinue giving advice. When she asks for help you might simply suggest that she try what you have done and leave it at that.

Do you have a question about dating and relating and learning to function as a single adult? Send it to: The Singles Advisor, c/o Transcript Newspapers, Box 69, Waltham, MA 02254.

Are you divorced or divorcing? The booklet, "Divorce and After: Learning to Function as a Single Adult?" is available for $4. Make check payable to: Relationships Agency, P.O. Box 434, Lincoln, MA 01773. Allow three to four weeks for delivery.

Norwood frosh gridders roll

NORWOOD — The Norwood freshman football team exploded for a 36-0 victory over visiting Needham.

When Norwood kicked off to start the game, it was a sign of things to come, as Mike Delbou almost recovered the ball.

"I had it for a second, but it got away and there was a big pileup and Needham recovered," said the fiery Delbou.

The Rockets didn't have the ball for long. On first down Norwood defensive end Phil Gallant tossed aside a blocker and hit the Needham runner so hard that he fumbled the ball and the ever alert Timmy Coyle recovered for Norwood

Norwood took over and Shane Dacko ran right up the middle behind Glen Kreger and Rusty Groh for a 20-yard gain, but the play was called back for illegal motion. So Norwood started over again on the 35-yard line and Jeff Putnam pitched out to Billy Jacobs around left end and the hard running Jacobs picked up a key block from Mike Cahaly and James Weber and raced into the endzone. Quarterback Jeff Putnam added the points on a keeper, and Norwood led 8-0.

Norwood mounted a second drive in the first quarter which carried into the second quarter as Putnam connected with his tight ends Weber and Chris Grant for 18 and 15 yard pass completions, while Coyle, Dacko, Gallant, and Jacobs were grinding out the ground game. On the third play of the second quarter, halfback Tim Coyle crashed over the goal line from two yards out behind Groh and Kreger. Putnam tossed to Dacko for the extra points and Norwood had a 16-0 lead.

Needham's ground game was shut down by the score Norwood defensive line of Gallant, Sean McKeown, Barrett Prinz, Groh, and Paul Fitzpatrick. The Rockets went to the air, but cornerback Jacobs put on a great rush and forced an errant pass which fell right into the hands of free safety Grant, for his first of two interceptions

The half ended with Norwood leading 16-0 and in full control as 35 of Norwood's 40 players had seen action.

The second half was more of the same as Dave Tashjian took the kickoff and almost broke it but was caught from behind by the only remaining Needham player. Norwood took over but back to back penalties forced a third and fifteen from the 35-yard line. Ordinarily this field position would favor the defense but not this time as Putnam fired a screen pass to Dacko who took off behind a wall of Steve Curran and Mike Amirault and rambled 45 yards into the endzone.

Putnam tossed to Grant for the conversion and Norwood led 24-0.

Once again a strong Norwood rush, this time from Amirault, forced a hurried throw, and again Grant came up with another interception.

By now Norwood was shuffling players in and out and when both fullbacks were injured, Coach Dalzell inserted tackle Fitzpatrick into the backfield. The big guy responded with superior blocking for Steve Grenham, Mike Noe, and Tashjian and carrying several Rockets into the endzone to give Norwood a 30-0 lead.

Quarterback Steve Smith just took the snap and handed it to Fitzpatrick and got out of the way. "I didn't want to get run over," said Smith, "Fitz is a force."

Norwood would score again, this time by the defense when Scott Kurey put on a great rush and got to the quarterback just as he released the ball. Dacko ripped the interception away from teammate Amirault and ran for a 60-yard touchdown, picking up an excellent block from Mike Connolly who wiped out the last two defenders to give Norwood a 36-0 victory.

The Norwood running game was in high gear and the passing game was right on target. The kicking game was near perfect, especially the only two punts that Norwood had to make.

Defensively, Norwood, who allowed a first quarter touchdown in game one, has shut out their opponents in the last eleven quarters.

The only negative aspect of the victory was the loss of standout defensive back and punt returner Paul Menyo, who will be for the season with a broken arm.

The Boxing Beat

By Jon Piper

A rib injury conceivably cancelled the writing of "Something Happened On The Way To The Championship" by Robbie Sims.

Sims, the brother of undisputed middleweight champion Marvelous Marvin Hagler, citing injury, pulled out of his match scheduled for October 17 in Detroit with James "The Heat" Kinchen.

Sims will be replaced by Iran "The Blade" Barkley, who has been KO'd by Sims.

Herb "The Oddsmaker" Lambeck posted Kinchen, ranked first by the WBA and WBC and second by the IBF at 160 pounds, a 6-5 favorite over Sims, who is ranked fourth by all three governing bodies.

Sims may have beaten Kinchen, although its unlikely from this perspective, looking at his last performance against an aged Roberto Duran, but he didn't need to risk his position against the top contender. Sims will most likely get a shot at a title when his brother abdicates the throne, possibly as soon as April 6 — the date he's tentatively scheduled to make a mockery of Sugar Ray Leonard.

"He (Sims) needs the competition," explains co-manager Pat Petronelli. "He's been on a role. If he doesn't have something to get pumped up for, he loses interest."

A safer means of activity for Sims would be with fading former contender Doug DeWitt, who fights Thomas Hearns and 25-1 odds (according to Lambeck) in the main event on the card.

Freddie Roach has entered the ring roughly 50 times, one of which was to go 10 rounds with WBC lightweight champion Hector "I'm Still Macho" Camacho since his pro boxing career began in 1978.

That's all Gabe Lamarca needs to know.

Lamarca manages Somerville's Franco D'Orio, who was to be in the opposite corner from Roach in the headliner of promotor Al Valenti's upcoming October 24 ESPN show at Lowell Auditorium.

D'Orio, 11-1, was eager to take on Roach, who is originally from Dedham and now fights out of Las Vegas. But when Lamarca, who was in Florida when D'Orio was asked if he wanted the fight, got wind of the match, he turned it down because of Roach's experience, even though Roach has 13 losses.

Instead, Angelo Dundee's latest protege, Davey Rivello, 9-0, of Attleboro, who had been scheduled to meet D'Orio on the recent Vinny Pazienza-Nelson Bolanos card in Providence, will tangle with Roach.

Roach hasn't been back to fight in New England since he lost the disputed call to the late Raphael Lopez at Boston Garden in 1982.

Randy Mitchem, a 31-year-old welterweight from North Carolina, was the latest name submitted to the Massachusetts Boxing Commission in an effort to find an opponent for Lowell sensation Mickey Ward in the co-feature after Eddie Van Kirk pulled out.

Co-promotor Bob Arum, who jumped to his feet with Ward's victory over Malden's Johnny Rafuse at the August 29 ESPN show in Lowell, wants a win for his promising ticket seller, but its unlikely Mitchem will be approved. Mitchem has done well at home, but has been knocked out an impressive number of times when he's ventured out of town.

"The Good Doctor" is intended as a humorous, tongue-in-cheek poke at sports, but in the November issue of "Inside Sports," the Doctor's prognosis for enigmatic heavyweight Gerry Cooney's career may have been a jab, but it was close to reality.

"The Great White Mope" has scheduled three fights for the next six months," the Doctor revealed. "He will go one round against Marty Piletti, a butcher from the Bronx, in January; followed by one round against Sidney Applebaum, a Hassidic diamond merchant from Manhattan, in March; and then will receive $20 million to fight the winner of the Mike Tyson-Michael Spinks fight. Tyson or Spinks will get $10 million dollars."

Ray Olivera, the 119 pounder from New Bedford, and super heavyweight Kilbert Pierce from Brockton, were the only New Englanders out of 120 boxers in 12 weight divisions to be chosen to the USA Amateur Boxing Federation mid-1986 rankings for the top amateur boxers in the country.

Former heavyweight champion Michael "Dynamite" Dokes (the handle is compliments of self-decreed "World's Greatest Promotor" Don King) was arrested in his home in Las Vegas after police found 11 ounces of a white powder suspected of being cocaine...Former world amateur champion Rickey Womack, who had a brief pro career with Detroit's Kronk Gym, was sentenced to 12-15 years for armed robbery and drug possession...Speaking of the police blotter and Kronk, Caveman Lee, the Kronk middleweight who served time for armed robbery (a crime he maintains he did not committ) following his one-minute, seven-second devastation at the hands of Hagler, retired because of persistent headaches after a one-fight comeback.

"LARGE ENOUGH TO SERVE SMALL ENOUGH TO CARE"

LAST CHANCE ON LOW GMAC FINANCING

THIS AD HAS ALREADY SAVED YOU MONEY.

We paid for it, too.
In fact, every advertiser you see in these pages paid handsomely for the privilege of being here.

And what we paid went toward the cost of producing the newspaper. Which made it a lot cheaper for you to buy.

How much cheaper? Well, if you took all the advertising away, the average newspaper would cost you about five times as much.

And offer you about half as much.

After all, advertising informs you about new products. It helps you make smarter decisions about what to buy. Often it enlightens you. Sometimes it entertains you.

And yes, occasionally it annoys you. But if it does, you can take advantage of one of advertising's nicest features.

You can simply ignore it.

It might hurt our feelings. But we'll still chip in for your newspaper.

ADVERTISING.
ANOTHER WORD FOR FREEDOM OF CHOICE.

North's tiger's on the prowl

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

NEWTON — Carla Goldberg likes to prowl.

At Newton North High School football games, that is.

As one of three mascot tigresses working the stands and sidelines of Dickinson Field each Saturday, Goldberg's job has a dual focus. To taunt and tease opponents, while instilling faith and frenzy in the hometown team.

A tough and dangerous job, indeed. But someone has to do it.

"We jump around, be hyper, be crazy," the 17-year-old senior says. "We bascically make fools of ourselves."

Fools, perhaps, but, like the tigress protecting her cubs in the African bush, Goldberg and her companions must ward off the sly advances of their only-known predator — mascots from opposing teams.

During the game against Brockton a month ago, Goldberg and her companions entered enemy territory to confront and box Brockton's mascot — the boxer dog.

"We went over just to box and their mascot began pushing us and hitting us. My head was spinning," Goldberg recalls. "She was going to fight us. She wanted blood."

But after the game, the boxing boxer dog from Brockton apologized. Still, Goldberg remains shaken by the incident, and now calls women from Brockton "brutes."

Opposing mascots are not the only dangers that confront Newton North Tigresses. Sometimes, their own kind will turn on them.

"We run around. Run up into the stands and try to get people psyched," she says. "But most of the people are like "Get away from me.'"

Wearing the tiger suit isn't fun and games all the time, either. "It's really gross," she says. "It's all worn out, and you can't see out of one of the eyes."

Still harping on the Hyde

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — School Committee members backed themselves into a corner by closing two elementary schools in 1984 and are "trying to dig themselves out of the hole" by constructing classroom additions on three "receiver" schools, according to Alderman George Mansfield.

The alderman from Newton Highlands acknowledged rising elementary school enrollments have left many schools overcrowded, but said the committee has avoided reopening the Hyde School.

> 'Our worst nightmares are coming true.'
> Ald. George Mansfield

School board members currently are considering reopening Bigelow Junior High School in Newton Corner and reorganizing the system to a middle school, lumping grades six, seven and eight together.

The School Department already has asked aldermen for $185,000 to construct additions at Mason-Rice, and is prepared to request $351,000 for two classroom additions at Countryside School. Parents of Ward School students are complaining of overcrowding. And a classroom addition at Bowen School also is in the making, Mansfield said.

"The School Committee argues that it's more cost efficient to build onto existing schools," he said. "If you add up the capital expenditures for these requested constructions, you'll find it's not the case."

The $351,000 School Committee request to build two classrooms at Countryside will be more costly than it would be to reopen and operate the Hyde for a year, he said.

"It's (Hyde) a salvagable building and this alternative would be less costly than the Bigelow proposal," according to Mansfield, "It would answer their space needs. All the reper-

NEWTON — Parents of children at Ward School are steaming over what they consider cramped conditions at that facility, a situation one teacher described as a "disservice to students."

About 25 parents attended last week's School Committee meeting to request the board add a second grade teacher at Ward to split up one class they say has 27 students.

According to members Sydra Schnipper and Jennifer Huntington, the parents' request sounded feasible, but there is no room to accommodate the extra class it would create. In addition, they said, many other schools are facing the same predicament.

"We are sympathetic," Huntington said. "But other schools

Police council money traced

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — After plodding through the spring and summer months, the Greater Boston Police Council's (GBPC) attempt to trace the nearly $1.6 million missing from its accounts is finally hitting paydirt.

Some of the missing money has been tracked down to two previously undiscovered bank accounts, a second Boston brokerage firm and several two-way radio enterprises — all linked to former GBPC consultant Timothy C. Coogan, according to James F.X. Dineen, one of the lawyers representing the GBPC.

"Every time we turn up one bank or brokerage account, there are more leads to follow through on. The information is beginning to pile up," said Dineen, a former U.S. attorney who now works for the Dwyer & Murray lawfirm of Boston.

In a Middlesex Superior Court civil suit filed late last year, the GBPC charged Coogan, 39, of Sudbury, with conflict of interest, fraud, unlawful conversion, breach of contract and breach of fiduciary trust for his role in an alleged scheme that diverted millions in public funds into a secret Bank of Boston account between 1982 and 1985.

A federal grand jury convened last fall is also probing the scandal.

The GBPC's attorneys believe Coogan used the money to pay for personal purchases and investments, real estate deals and business ventures that may involve Waltham resident John Ackerman, who owns a High Street telecommunications firm.

But Coogan, an attorney who was employed as the GBPC's administrator and general counsel from 1980 to 1985 and worked out of an office in the Newton Police Department, has categorically denied the charges and has filed a countersuit accusing the police association of violating the state's public bidding laws.

He claims he earned the missing $1.56 million through a stipulation in his GBPC contract that allowed him to engage in private telecommunication consulting services.

The case has been stalled since an initial court hearing last December, when Coogan's assets were frozen.

Dineen refused to disclose the specific evidence turned up so far, but did generally discuss the latest findings.

When the GBPC's suit was filed last year, some of the missing funds had been traced from the Bank of Boston account allegedly opened by Coogan to the Coolidge Bank & Trust Company in Watertown, the Aldermen challenge retirement law

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A city worker's fight against mandatory retirement has in the past four days received boosts from the Board of Aldermen and the U.S. Congress. But that may not be enough to save his job.

Congress on Friday passed a measure forbidding forced retirements based solely on age. And the Board of Aldermen Monday night unanimously backed a resolution urging the city to let 65-year-old Leo Curry keep his job.

Curry, however, said Fire Chief Edward Reilly has told him the federal measure will not save him even if President Ronald Reagan signs it into law. Reilly was not present at Monday night's meeting.

> 'What is the big difference between 64 and 65? I don't see it.'
> Leo Curry

Though aldermen enthusiastically joined Curry's cause, those interviewed said their resolution offers only symbolic support. State law forces the city's Retirement Board to make Curry give up his job, they said.

A city employee for 39 years, Curry heads the Fire and Wire Department, responsible for maintaining more than 800 fire alarms and 150 emergency call boxes. He turned 65 on Oct. 2 and must leave his job by the end of the month, according to state retirement laws.

Curry has filed an age discrimination complaint with the local office of the federal

'Red Sox Fever' explained

COMMENTARY
By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

To those few innocent bystanders out there who have yet to catch "Red Sox Fever" and still might be wondering what the recent frenzy is all about, we offer the following explanation.

There is, deep inside each and every one of us, a cave man who still does not understand how the universe around him works. He has yet to tie the sun's rising and setting to the rotation of the earth. He has yet to connect the coming of fall and winter with the earth's revolving around the sun.

He is hairy, dirty, apprehensive, prone to grunting and he scrunches up his hooded brow when contemplating these deep, dark, apparently impenetrable mysteries. He dreads the onset of night; and he prays for the sun to come up in the morning.

It is for the comfort of this deathly scared primitive that the elaborate worldwide network of professional sports has been constructed.

Faced with the swirling chaos he suspects lies just beneath the civilized surface of 20th century world, everyman finds great comfort in an event that has been divided into two halves, four quarters, nine innings, three periods, or whatever.

He likes the idea of a piece of time being broken off from the maddeningly persistent continuum and set aside, with a definite beginning, a middle and an obvious end to it. This is nice. This is a relief. This is a source of real solace in a world that grinds on blindly, inexorably to a destiny most fear will make the chaos out of which it was born look like a "love-in" at Franklin Park.

These same fears and instincts account for the popularity of religion and elaborate religious rituals through the ages. In a Catholic Mass, for instance, plodding through the opening prayers to the offertory, the consecration, the communion and the closing benediction amounts to a sort of spiritual nap, a short break from the pandemonium we work so hard to hold at bay. Coming away from such a service, regardless of the faith, the congregant feels relieved and refreshed.

So it is with sports events.

Boston College students jump on the Green Line and head for Fenway Park looking for a respite of relaxation and reassurance.

Mystery still surrounds the collapse of Homer Street.

The hole story

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A 40-foot section of Homer Street mysteriously collapsed last week, rupturing a 6-inch water main underneath the roadbed and interrupting water service to some area homes.

Police closed off Homer Street as Department of Public Works (DPW) crews attempted to figure out what happened and how to fill in the hole.

According to Public Works Commissioner James Hickey and City Engineer Paul Giunta, the cause of the cave-in, which occured shortly before 10 a.m. at the intersection of Homer, Pleasant and Kenwood streets, is unknown.

Hickey said he was unsure how many homes would lose water service and how long any interruptions would last.

Local residents said it was a "miracle" no one was injured, because Homer Street is heavily travelled.

"It's a good thing this happened while the kids were in school," Sheila Duggan, of 216 Homer St. said. "It was a miracle that no cars or people fell in the hole."

Police stopped traffic at the corners of Morton Street and Homer and Tartleton and Homer while DPW, BostonGas and New England Telephone crews arrived on the scene to determine the extent of the damage.

Thomas McDermott, a BostonGas foreman, said a 4-inch gas main running across the gaping, water-filled hole — 40 feet long, 10 feet deep and 12 feet across — was not damaged, although gas pressure along that line was cut off as a precautionary measure.

"We will replace a cross-section of the line as soon as the city determines what it will do," he said. He added that repairs to the gas main should not take more than a day once the city decides what to do.

The mishap was not the first time Homer Street has collapsed. According to Hickey, city crews two years ago dug up part of the road north of this incident in an effort to find out why sink holes had developed.

"We had a similar incident about seven or eight years ago," he said. "That was not nearly as bad, but this road has had problems in the past. I have no idea at this point what the cause is and we never found out what it was when we dug up a section of the road two years ago."

Hickey said DPW crews could rip up between 50 and 100 feet of the roadbed in an effort to determine if an undetected water leak is the cause.

He could not predict when the hole will be filled and traffic flow on the street resumed.

While Hickey and Giunta could not come up with an explanation, Duggan said she suspects truck traffic on the street loosened soil underneath the road.

"Two years ago, after the last mishap, we put together a petition and asked the Board of Aldermen to exclude truck traffic on the street. Nothing happened," she said.

Giunta disagreed.

"I don't think that's likely," he said of Duggan's suggestion. "Even if the trucks did loosen the soil, it has to go somewhere."

Duggan said the mishap could have positive results for the neighborhood. "This could be the best thing to happen," she said. "Maybe now, the city will take some kind of action."

She added while she was receiving water into her house, the toilets had backed up and the water that was coming in was "murky."

"All the toilets are backing up and there is dirty brown water coming out of the tap," she said.

Wendy O'Brien, a Pleasant Street resident, concurred with Duggan's observations.

"I am getting very little pressure and my toilets are filled with dirty brown water," she said. "I hope they get everything back to normal soon."

Overseas adoptions full of pain and joy

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON CORNER — For Sheila Leavitt, foreign adoption is a little like going through childbirth labor pains.

"You go through it and forget how bad it was after you've had the baby," Leavitt says.

But after gathering together a handfull of papers, including marriage license and financial solvency forms, all of which had to be notarized and stamped by state, federal and Colombian governments; and after being fingerprinted by the Bureau of Immigration and analyzed by social workers for mental and marriage stability, Leavitt and her husband Andrew Lichtman were finally allowed to travel to Colombia to pick up their new baby girl, Ariella, in June.

"It was a hassle," recalls Leavitt, who had thought it time to add a second addition to their family. But it could have been worse. The foreign adoption process would have been "a pretty hair-raising experience" without the aid from Alliance for Children, run by Filis Casey of Newton, one of a half dozen state certified international adoption agencies in Massachusetts.

Over the past decade, these agencies have grown in popularity in the Bay State as it has become increasingly difficult to adopt the few available American-born infants. The state Office for Children requires that all families work through a private, non-profit agency to ease the task of record keeping and to prevent fraud.

Since 1974, Alliance has placed 500 foreign children — mostly from Ecuador, Chili, Guatemala, Colombia, India and the Philippines — with Massachusetts families. Another agency, International Adoptions, of Waltham, has placed up to 315 in one year.

One couple from another state Leavitt met on the plane home from Bogota adopted a Colombian child independently. "They just contacted the department of social services in Colombia," she said. But they had a difficult time hooking up with their adopted son due to irregular office hours kept by government employees in the small town where the boy lived.

"He was an older boy. He was terrified on the plane home. He wasn't speaking Spanish or English," she said.

In contrast, Alliance for Children, of Wellesley, had reserved rooms in a guest house near the Bogota orphanage responsible for Ariella. Alliance and other adoption agency's refer many of their clients to this guest house, where the proprietor "knew the ropes in terms of paperwork" for parents who adopt children, said Leavitt.

"He took us around and acted like a nanny to us," she said.

In addition to touring coffee and banana plantations, the couple filled out more papers and endured physical exams during their week-long stay.

All this preparatory work fulfills three different sets of laws for the foreign adoption, said Casey — those of the foreign country, U.S. immigration, and the Massachusetts courts.

All in all, parents usually wait a year before they receive or retrieve their adopted child, she said. For Leavitt and Lichtman, however, the wait was only six months.

They started working with Casey at Alliance for Children in January and were notified that Ariella would be their adopted daughter in April, a month after her birth.

Alliance initiated a "home study" of the couple, a 10-hour process, over a period of weeks, during which a social worker determines marital stability and motivation for adopting a child from another country.

"Social workers spend a lot of time trying to ascertain prejudices," said Casey. Their time is also spent discussing how the new addition will permanently change family dynamics.

"We look for flexible families who are open to accepting a child from a foreign country who arrives with a slight health problem," she said.

These problems range from malnutrition, parasites and diarrhea to slight digestive malfunctions, said Casey.

But the illnesses are temporary. Although an adopted child may "look horrible, at first," she said, "a few months later they look great."

Ariella, however, was much healthier than most adopted babies from third world countries. "She didn't miss a beat," said Leavitt.

But Ariella is lucky. "You go to an orphanage and see kids just lying there," Casey said. "You say to yourself, 'My God, it doesn't have to be that way.' Some kids have never seen the sun."

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY
MOONSTRUCK
The moonstone was so named because it contains bluish white spots which, when held to the light, present a silvery play of color not unlike that of the moon. When light gleams from beneath its surface, it produces a soft sheen that fades into pearl-like shadow. Not all moonstones, however, have this pearly cast. Some are tinted with green and blue. Others seem to be sprinkled all over with golden spots of yellow. The brillant silvery rays and reflections seem to move around when the gem is turned back and forth, appearing like moonbeams playing over water. This very feminine, opalescent, transparent gem looks equally good set in gold, silver, or platinum.
You don't have to travel far to find beautiful and unusual gems. Just come in to CAROL "THE GOLD LADY," conveniently located at 109 Dalby St. Newton, just off Watertown St. We feature an impressive selection of gem stones set in very creative settings. You'll have your choice of earrings, rings, pendants, bracelets and pins for your favorite gem. We are also known for our superb design services. Shop with us Tues, Wed, Sat. 10-6, Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

Sources of 'Red Sox Fever' run deep

Ernest Hemingway seemed to know this. In at least one of his stories, "A Clean, Well-lighted Place," he refers openly to the "nada," the nothingness, he suspects lies at the heart of our universe. His vision cuts to the quick of those who would suggest the world is making its way through a well-plotted, ameliorative course to a point where the lion will lay down with the lamb and every team in baseball will win the world series.

In turn, much of what Hemingway writes about is ritual of the sort aimed at masking the swirling chaos that constantly threatens to creep out of the heart of the universe and into our very lives. He writes of sports, especially bullfighting, as a sort of metaphor for his vision of the world.

The ceremony of bullfighting — the costumes, the pomp and circumstance, the traditions that must be observed, the procedures that must be followed by the numbers — is seductive enough even to mask the madness that is the basic fact of the sport: A man is killing a bull after he and his colleagues have tortured it into utter confusion and exhaustion.

The spilling of the bull's blood is as nothing compared to the rigid observation of the time-honored rutuals. It is in the latter that aficionados find solace, diversion and meaning.

As if the rituals of sports are not enough, the avid sports fan seeks even more stasis and structure in the plethora of statistics produced by even the most lackluster event. The word itself, "statistic," comes from the Greek work for "to stand still."

It is in statistics that the cave man finds the finest distraction from the maddening swirl of the world around him. The number of games Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens won in the regular season, in 1986, is frozen solid. It will never change. Ah, what relief. Something you can count on. It will never let you down.

Sit around after a round of golf sometime, while two of your foursome name the starting lineups in the 1965 world series, when Los Angeles beat Minnesota in seven games, and you will begin to appreciate the importance of statistics. In an ever-changing world, their rock hard stability can provide a lot of comfort.

This desire for stasis and structure has produced a phenomenon unique to the 20th century, made possible by recent technological advances. The Elias Sports Bureau, a computerized compilation of sports statistics going back to the time when Hector was a pup, can provide millions of frozen moments for those who cherish them.

Do you want to know how Oil Can Boyd manages when pitching to a left handed batter at night, with the temperature below 50 degrees, in Yankee Stadium? Elias can tell you.

But we are surrounded by thousands of mini-Eliases, serious stats freaks. Look around. Listen. They can tell you who won the American League batting title with the lowest average ever. (Carl Yastremski, .301) Or who holds the major league record for the most career strikeouts. (Reggie Jackson) Want to know who holds the National League record for home runs by a switch-hitter? Just ask. (Pete Rose)

They seize on these frozen facts and find relief in them as shipwreck victims hold tight to anything that will float. They pour over the tiny type in newspapers and magazines searching for more flotsam and jetsam to hold on to. If a fraction of the energy devoted to sports statistics were gathered together, one day, and aimed at the threat of a nuclear holocaust, we'd be in clover in nine and one-half minutes. Find a cure for AIDS? Four minutes and fifty seconds.

Besides the sheer creature comfort to be found in structuring a jot of time and freezing its facts for all eternity, there is another joy derived from professional sports that also appeals to the surviving shadow of our primordial selves. It comes with the winning.

Charles Darwin, who studied our primitive origins would recognize it. The sports version of social Darwinism calls for "survival of the fittest." If our team wins, we are, for a moment, the superior elements of our species. It's a euphoric but fleeting feeling.

Red Sox fans don't really know much about this. They have had to suppress that side of their natures for many decades now, since their team was last declared "the fittest" in professional baseball in 1918.

Right now, the feelings are circulating just below the surface. Hopefully, you will know more about them later this week, when Red Sox fans, refreshed from another well structured, nine-inning respite from the swirling chaos of existence, charge into Kenmore Square to roar to the world that, for the moment, "We are number one!"

Police report rash of housebreaks

NEWTON — Six homes were broken into Friday, and another house break was reported to police early Monday morning.

An Otis Street home was broken into between 9:30 a.m. and 3:15 p.m. Friday while no one was home. The thief jimmied open a ground floor window and took a VCR, color TV and jewelry.

On Chestnut Street, a thief cut a hole in the screen over a rear window, then reached in and unlocked the door next to it. Police said the thief disturbed only the master bedroom, taking about $200 worth of jewelry. Many other valuables were left behind, said police.

A rear window was the port of entry for a thief on Anthony Road also. A screen was cut and the window was forced open between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., said police. The thief took two stereo receivers, a 35-millimeter camera, a jug of change, $100 in cash and one gold earring.

Assorted pieces of jewelry were stolen out of a Kenneth Street home between 3 and 9:40 p.m. after the intruder broke a window in a rear door and unlocked it. A case of liquor also was taken, but was later found outside the house.

Nearby on High Street, two homes were broken into. A thief forced open a ground floor window and stole a color TV and number of pewter figurines of animals. A suitcase full of valuable Hummel figures was left behind, leading police to believe the occupants of the house may have scared the thief away when they came home at 9:30 p.m.

While police were getting the report on the first house on High Street, they found another house a couple of doors down the road also had been broken into. A small glass pane was broken out of a door, allowing the intruder to reach in an unlock it. It was unknown whether anything was stolen because the home's occupants were out.

Shortly after midnight Sunday, police received a report of an apartment break on Elliot Street. The resident said the break must have occurred between Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening, but it took some time to notice the missing items, which were a 35-millimeter camera and assorted jewelry. Police said the thief apparently entered the building through an unlocked side door, then jimmied a latch on a doorway to the second floor apartment.

Newton Corner project gets half a nod

The Board of Aldermen upheld a previous decision approving Fahey's plans. The Texas-based builder must now gain approval from Watertown before construction begins at the 264 Centre St. site.

Proponents of the plan argued that, while it was not the ideal solution to increased commercialization and traffic and density problems in Newton Corner, it was at least a workable compromise.

In addition, Alderman Ronald Marini said the housing units — with an estimated price tag of $270,000 each — are a better alternative for the area than an office building, which Fahey could build without aldermanic approval.

Martin Tan, a Fahey representative, has said the developer would build offices if he did not win approval from the board for his residential complex.

Despite Marini's argument, there was opposition to Fahey's plans. Two weeks ago, Fahey's petition was approved by the board 18-3 but Alderman Bruce Carmichael filed a motion to reconsider that vote but his motion failed. He said he wanted the developer to reduce the number of housing units he was requesting.

"I think it is just too much for this area," he said. "There is already too much traffic and too much density in Newton Corner."

Paper chase stalls affordable housing

NEWTON — Aldermen have stalled a developer's proposal to build two units of affordable housing on Bartlett Terrace.

Alderman Rodney Barker Monday night questioned whether the city could legally install sewer and water mains there because it has no proof residents ever granted an easement to put in the undergound pipes.

Bartlett Terrace is a private street and, to install underground utility lines, the city must have a document showing residents at some point in time gave permission, Barker said.

The deed developer Mel Barkan gave to the city contains no statement granting ingress or egress, he said.

The Board of Aldermen by a 13-to-7 vote backed his motion to hold off approving sewer and water installations for two weeks, giving the city's Law Department time to research the history of the property.

But attorney Alan Schlesinger, representing Barkan, said he would submit a deed to city solicitors that he believes will show the right to install utilities was granted as far back as the 1920s.

The two Bartlett Terrace units are being offered to the city as compensation under the 10 Percent ordinance for allowing Barkan to build the Fairways, a market-rate condominium complex.

The affordable housing ordinance requires a developer to contribute 10 percent of the extra units when aldermen grant a special permit for more units than would be normally allowed by zoning.

As Barkan is seeking to do in this case, a developer can build the affordable units off the site of the main development.

The proposal has stirred controversy among the neighbors who say the land is not large enough for two units.

Area zoning requires each home to have 15,000 square feet, but the two plots have around 12,000 and 10,000 square feet respectively, according to Milt Levy, a Barlett Terrace neighbor.

The land is situated on a rock ledge, making even less of it usable, said Levy. "The site is unsuitable for two houses," he said.

"The ledge is quite inaccessible," said Charles Stover, a neighbor who lives on Westminster Road. "We have some questions about the zoning."

But Alderman Ronald Marini, who voted against the delay, said the board is unnecessarily slowing down this project. Barkan's proposal to compensate the city for extra housing at the Fairways was made years ago, he said.

Firefighters defeat challenge to McArdle

NEWTON — The Newton Firefighters Association (NFA) has re-elected Lt. Kevin McArdle to a fifth term as president, apparently rejecting challenger Michael Morrissey's charges that its leadership has lost touch with the rank and file.

NFA members voted 86-to-36 for McArdle last week, with roughly one-half the union turning out for the election.

"To be elected by a margin of 50, it has to be an endorsement of my candidacy," said McArdle.

Morrissey had accused him and the NFA leadership of being too involved in statewide and national union issues. He charged McArdle was harboring ambitions for a statewide union post and was less interested in the day-to-day concerns of the city's firefighters.

Morrissey, the brother of recently unsuccessful State Representative candidate Jack Morrissey, carried his message to fire stations across the city last week.

After the tally, the 38-year old McArdle said his most important concern is the welfare of NFA members, though he did not rule out a run for statewide union office.

Despite the defeat, Morrissey said his campaign had a positive effect and would not lead to a rift with McArdle.

"I succeeded in one thing. I brought a little enthusiasm," said Morrissey, who works out of the Oak Hill fire station with McArdle. "I support Kevin 100 percent."

McArdle, who faced opposition in three previous elections, said his opponent's candidacy served to arouse interest in the election. "Unopposed, bascially, is apathy," McArdle said. "I'm glad for the controversy and debate."

Board vote changed in zoning dispute

NEWTON — Robert Imperato and Jill Freint can maintain their Washington Street home as a four-unit structure if they win approval from the Zoning Board of Appeal (ZBA) later this month.

The building owners were forced to ask the ZBA and Board of Aldermen for permission to maintain the structure as a four-unit home after an anonymous letter to the Building Department revealed the building was not zoned to allow four units.

Monday night, the Board of Aldermen approved their request, on the condition that the ZBA waives the minimum square footage requirement. The land on which the structure sits is 128 square feet short of the 20,000 square feet required for such a conversion.

This was the second time the Imperato-Freint petition faced a board vote. Two weeks ago, aldermen shot down the petition.

But, Alderman Sondra Shick filed a motion to reconsider the previous board vote against the homeowners in a successful effort to win approval.

"I support this because the homeowners are offering two apartments at around $500 per month," she said. "I prefer rental housing for this area, and these people are providing affordable rental housing."

Shick said Imperato and Freint could be forced to charge more than twice the rent per unit if not allowed to maintain four units on the site.

They rent three and live in the forth.

Alderman Richard McGrath, who also supports the homeowners, said they were a victim of spite.

"These people are victims of vindictive individuals," he said, referring to Leon and Shirley Jaffe who have waged a campaign to rid the city of alleged illegal apartments. "They are going up against pure spite that is being touted as legal right."

He added Imperato and Freint would not be in the position of possibly losing their home had it not been for the Jaffe's "spying and sneaking around."

"Mrs. Jaffe called me the other day and told me how bad an alderman I would be if I voted for this petition," he said. "That was enough for me. If Mrs. Jaffe says I am a bad alderman, that is the best compliment I can get."

Alderman Paul Coletti, who previously voted against Imerato and Freint, said he changed his vote Monday night because the building is owner occupied and because the owners have invested a lot of money into fixing the building.

Deficit pending

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city's annual free cash figures will not save it from projections of a $20 million budget deficit over the next five years, according to city officials.

Free cash is the amount of money the city has on hand not set aside for specific items in the budget. It is used mostly to maintain city facilities or to make exceptional purchases, said Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, and differs from surplus in that it does not include the city's uncollected bills.

As such, free cash was not included in the city's five-year financial forecast, he said. That forecast was based solely on the city's operating budget, which this year is estimated to be around $117 million.

Cirillo predicts the city's day-to-day expenses will rise to $146 million by fiscal 1992, while revenues will be only $138 million that year.

The total deficit for the five years is projected to be around $20 million, starting with $3 million next year. Since the city by law must have a balanced budget, more money will have to be found or some expenses must be cut. Projections were based on conditions, such as the inflation rate, that exist now.

To have included the city's free cash in those projections would have increased both the city's funds and expense needs by the same amount, Cirillo said.

And even if he had wanted to include free cash in his projections, this would have been tricky or dangerous, Cirillo said. Free cash amounts are difficult to predict and therefore unwise to rely on.

"A couple of years ago, we had a negative free cash balance," he said. "I'm not too sure many people know that."

As an example of its unpredictability, he said the city's free cash for last year would have been $4.4 million — instead of the record $6.1 million — except for three late additions.

The federal government reimbursed Newton $730,000 for Hurricane Gloria damage, the state paid Newton $700,000 for a school building project completed years ago and the city received around $350,000 in Hotel/Motel tax receipts after its operating budget was set.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann, at his weekly press conference, said projects the city plans to fund out of free cash are necessary. They include maintenance work on streets and buildings that would become more costly if delayed. Many are health and safety items that would be dangerous not take take care of now, he said.

"Which of the health and safety items would you cut out?" he asked, adding citizens are invited to suggest deleting any project they feel is unnecessary. "If there is something you don't like about what's being done, tell us."

Cuts in federal and state aid, increased sewer/water charges from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority and higher assessments by Middlesex County are among the financial pressures impinging on the city's finances, he said.

The city has forestalled impending financial crisis by such measures as selling surplus buildings and hiring private companies for its ambulance and trash collection services, the mayor said.

Declining school enrollment and a state takeover of county courts have also helped, Mann said.

But many of sources of revenues and savings will no longer be available, Mann said. Trash costs, for example, are expected to double and no school buildings are slated to be declared surplus and sold, he said.

Given the financial pressures now facing the city, Cirillo said he would not be surprised if free cash figures in the coming years were to drop.

City set pace with smoking ban

What began in the city of Newton a dozen or more years ago has set the tone for the entire Commonwealth. Newton was the first municipality to enact a smoking ban, at first aimed primarily at retail stores and places of general public use. The foremost advocate was Lois Pines, then on the Board of Aldermen and now moving to the State Senate without opposition. Her spirited effort caught on throughout the land, too.

Environmental regulations at the state level have followed. We find it surprising at this late date that cities and towns have been slow to adopt ordinances which would establish the smoking ban on a strong home town basis. Waltham has initiated nothing, while Watertown and the usually progressive Cambridge are just getting around to discussion on a local law. Such action is certainly in keeping with one of the more important health safety trends.

Surprising, or gratifying, if you will, has been the voluntary introduction of restrictions and the willngness of individual smokers to discipline themselves. Any number of business firms, without Big Brother looking over the shoulder, do such things as requiring use of special areas and installing air purification equipment.

Praise be, there is an absence of those smoke-filled meeting rooms so common. Cigars, cigarettes and pipes aren't part of the scene anymore. This required no legislation. The big federal push on the nicotine front, together with ordinance enactment, created an atmosphere in which smokers soon convinced themselves they should have a care for the sensibilities of others. At home, in a car and out in the open air, puffing away doesn't inflict fouled air on an unwilling companion. The courtesy factor is just great.

Since voluntary compliance is so prevalent, why the need for more municipal legislation where it doesn't exist? Simply because it is worthwhile to have uniformity in application of the smoking ban, giving the nonsmoker valid support for complaining about abuse.

There may be a reason to resist local ordinance controls which go too far. Cambridge, for example, would impose restriction on private offices. Such an intrusion is both undesirable and not necessary in view of the broad acceptance of restraints on a voluntary basis.

But the Cambridge measure which would ban smoking in virtually all public places has merit. It works in Newton and elsewhere. Stores, banks, theatres, libraries and places of public assembly all should come within the embargo. Establishment of smoking and nonsmoking areas in restaurants makes a lot of sense.

Kudos to the Garden City for continuing to be a lighthouse for the rest of the commonwealth.

Counties need closer look on ballot

It's easy enough to vote yes on a ballot question when no controversial factor is involved. That on Nov. 4 asking approval for creation of charter commissions to recommend possible changes in the structure of county government should pass handily even though county government continues as a matter of little public concern.

It is fortunate county operations are being watchdogged carefully by advisory committees, thanks to a reform movement that had its beginning away back in 1970. Total elimination of a system regarded as obsolete by many was the objective then of reformers, who were aiming at patronage and a lack of accountability. While abolition never came, and may never happen, there have been gains.

The chief one saw transfer of budget control from the Joint Legislative Committee on Counties to the advisory groups. Three-member commissions which run the counties became more accountable. Rep. Charles Flaherty of Cambridge, most knowledgeable among all lawmakers on the subject, can be credited for making it happen. It is possible charter review will carry some of Flaherty's idea for further strengthening of the system into reality.

One option spelled out is to install a professional executive or manager as the chief administrative officer. Cities and towns generally do well with managers. This removes operational control one step away from ongoing political influence. Hiring a professional to do the job is preferable to enlarging the powers of the chairman of the board in each county, another option contained in enabling legislation..

Nine of the 14 counties have the charter question on the ballot, with Middlesex the largest by far. Fifty-three communities contribute to the support of the $35 million Middlesex budget, by no means small potatoes in the fiscal patch. Except for the advisory groups, citizens generally don't seem to give a tinker's tad about how it's being spent.

Each 19-member study group will include the three sitting commissioners as well at the chairperson of the advisory commitee. A major problem is in filling the 15 remaining slots with at-large public members. Four of the counties haven't been given full slates of nominees. Both Newton and Waltham reflect apathy with only one resident's name to be seen on the Nov. 4 ballot.

No matter the apparent citizen apathy. The charter revision movement is a step in the right direction.

Limited county fuctions now consist of maintaining the registries of deeds and probate, along with jurisdicion over some jails and hospitals. A state takeover could be done with hardly a ripple to indicate any change. Just maybe, the charter recommendations, after review, will nudge the county system along that path. It is long overdue.

Opinions on the ballot questions by local League of Women Voters

Don't be fooled on Question #1

Don't be fooled. Question #1 is an anti-abortion amendment which would allow the legislature to interfere in our personal, private decisions about child bearing and abortion. If you don't want legislators telling you (or your daughter, wife, granddaughter, mother) you can't have an abortion even if you are the victim of rape or incest, or have severe health problems, vote NO. If you don't want legislators telling your private insurance company they can't cover abortions anymore, except to save your life, vote NO. If you don't want legislators regulating the services your doctor and hospitals provide, vote NO. If you don't think it's fair for the poor to have public funds cut off, vote NO. If you think people should be able to follow their own religious and moral beliefs about birth control and abortion, vote NO.

Don't be fooled. This amendment is not just about public funding. Question #1 would allow the legislature (called the General Court) to prohibit abortion should U.S. Supreme Court decisions weaken federal Constitutional protection. Don't lose state Constitutional protection for your freedom of choice: vote NO.

Don't be fooled. This amendment affects us all. If you don't vote, you may lose. Vote NO on #1.

(By Ann Morse Hartner)

Question #2: Vote No

This amendment to the state constitution would allow public funds to provide aid, materials and services to private schools and their students.

It is unfair to expect taxpayers to subsidize education in non-public schools. Parents who choose private schooling do so with the expectation of paying for it. Meanwhile, the public schools must educate all children.

Massachusetts ranks number one in the disparity between rich and poor school districts and 38th in the nation in state aid to public schools. No state mandated program for public education has ever been fully funded. Passage of Question #2 would further separate the "haves" from the "have-nots" by diverting already-limited public school funds to private education.

Passage of Question #2 could cost a lot. A promoter of Question #2 and former candidate for Newton School Committee supports a $500 stipend for each child in private school. The yearly cost of such a program to taxpayers in the Commonwealth would be $75 million. Another $5 million annually would be required to provide textbooks to private school students. Other sorts of direct assistance for non-public schools would be inevitable.

Let's keep public funds for public schools. Vote NO on Question #2.

(By Mary Adelstein and Joan Shirley Bates.)

Question #3: Vote NO

Question #3 is deceptive because ultimately the taxpayer will lose, not gain. It proposes to repeal the surtax but may actually require us to pay a surtax one year longer than necessary. The proposed revenue cap which promises to fill our pockets with refunded dollars is more likely to handicap development of sound fiscal policy. The cap will not allow the state to collect needed income during times of economic downturn even to support initiatives needed to reverse the decline.

During times of economic growth the cap will not allow legislators to put aside surplus funds to take care of obligations such as the state's pension liability or to realistically plan long-term initiatives in public education, housing, services for the elderly.

If Question #3 passes, the state will be hard put to continue direct support to local communities at levels made necessary by Proposition 2½. State aid will not disappear, but it will be harmfully diminished as will the communities it supports.

And local communities, due to the final provision of Question #3, will not be allowed to initiate local option taxes to fill in the gaps. Truthfully, surplus revenues will be refunded, but at an extremely high cost. Please vote NO on Nov. 4.

(By Lynne Sullivan)

Question #6 — mail-in voter registration. Vote YES

Do you know someone who recently moved and just hasn't had time to register to vote in her new location? Do you know someone who can never manage to get to City Hall when it is open because he works such long hours and travels so much? Or do you know someone who is having increasing difficulty getting around, and finds the simplest errands a major problem?

All these people (and others) need Mail-in Voter Registration. Perhaps you also know someone who recently moved to Massachusetts from New York, California, Texas, or another of the 22 states which already use this system. Newcomers to the Bay State are surprised at our cumbersome system of registering voters. In states where mail-in voter registration is the law, it has been very successful.

One of the biggest steps towards increasing voter turnout in American elections is to improve and streamline the voter registration process. The proposed law will also provide better safeguards against fraud than we have currently.

Voting is a right, not a privilege. Practicing law is a privilege — notice the difference! Fair access to the ballot box is basic to American democracy. Vote YES on Question #6!

Ban on Mets cap belies traditions

By Howard Altman

For some strange reason, folks in this area don't appreciate a guy walking around with a Mets hat on his head.

"Go back to New York, you bum," they all say. "Go back to that rotten Apple and get mugged."

And I thought this place was the Cradle of Liberty. The place where the Minutemen fought the Red Coats for the freedom to pursue an independent life.

Sure. But try and express a lifelong loyalty to your home team and the descendents of those same Minutemen forget all about the Constitution.

"You communist," they say to the man in the Mets hat. "You have some nerve wearing that rag on your head."

I have been abused in bars and on the street for standing up for my team, all of which I expect. After all, the bookies of this nation neglected the fact that the Red Sox are one hell of a team and made them 12-5 underdogs, the biggest such margin in the last 36 years.

Not that the bookies really care who wins. But tons of money from New York, added to that from all those suckers from Nebraska and other places where no one knows the Red Sox and everyone knows the Mets and their commercials, means the bookies have no choice.

They don't care who wins or which team is really the best. All the bookies care about is that as many people bet on the Red Sox as bet on the Mets. As long as the books are even, the bookies make out.

Hey, I didn't set the odds, but Red Sox fans are mad as hell and are taking it out on me.

I can understand how the fans up here would be a little miffed by such a lack of respect for their team. After all, most people outside of New England were saying the Mets would win in a cakewalk.

The people up here have seen their team win the toughest division in baseball and go on to win their league after being one strike away from becoming World Series spectators.

I can understand negative reaction to my Mets hat, which I guess symbolizes to some all that is bad about New York.

I can understand that to many, New York City is a 24-hour-a-day loony-tune factory and the people who live there need psychiatric help.

I can understand that there is nothing people like more than to beat up on the arrogant favorite.

But Monday night's move by the Newton Board of Aldermen really took the cake.

Monday night, Alderman Richard McGrath rose up and offered the following resolution:

"Point of order, Mr. Presi-[illegible]" McGrath said. "Is it not true that there is a code of decorum and dress in the honored chamber?" he asked.

"Is it not true that part of that dress code says you cannot wear a hat inside the rail? If that is true, I kindly ask you, Mr. President, to pass this resolution and tell the person wearing the offending hat to please remove it."

After a round of hoots and hollers and cheers from the crowd, Michael Malec, president of the board, turned to me and asked me to remove my Mets hat.

"Hey, what about freedom of speech?" I asked. "What about the freedoms the colonists fought so hard to earn?"

So much for the Minutemen.

Hazardous waste ballot question is crucial

To the Editor:

The legislature must be forced to set into motion a plan of action for cleaning up hazardous waste, as Lois Pines explained at her home during a recent 8 a.m. meeting with concerned Newton constituents.

A yes vote on Question #4, the Hazardous Waste Initiative, will tell our legislators that, without question, we want a definite timetable for the cleanup and that we expect more than the shifting of waste from one site to another, as is presently the case.

We want a strict set of guidelines, no more stalling and no more loopholes. The Massachusetts House passed this proposal 145-0 in May but the Senate failed to vote on it. Now it is up to the voters of Massachusetts.

With passage of the Emergency Cleanup Bill, industry and government would be committed to a rapid yet reasonable timetable for finding and controlling all of Massachusetts' hazardous waste sites. The initiative would set deadlines and standards for action, establish research and development programs, improve citizen participation and require the state to find appropriate funding sources and make recommendations to the legislature within six months.

Water, an essential to life should be a prized commodity. Water polluted by toxic chemicals and the irresponsibility of business in allowing this to happen is an outrage. Enough time has been wasted and, for many, the effects of chemicals causing mutations have already taken their toll.

The Hazardous Waste Initiative Petition must be viewed as a start, and if we hesitate to try and satisfy every critic the pollutors will continue their spree until the situation is without hope.

If industry continues to increase profits yet fails to take responsibility for prevention and cleanup and citizens protest government spending to reach this end, then individuals will have to bear the tremendous cost in money, pain and suffering when members of their families become sick. Each of us will eventually find out if the water we drink is polluted with chemicals, but, by then, will it not be too late? Think about what kind of coffee went into that last cup of coffee that you stopped for.

Among the hundreds of politicians and boards supporting Yes on Question #4 are Senator Jack Backman, Senator-elect Lois Pines, State Representatives Joe DeNucci and David Cohen, Mayor Ted Mann, members of the Newton Board of Aldermen, the Newton Commissioner of Health and hopefully you.

Exactly why is Star Wars so important?

To the Editor:

Neither President Reagan nor Secretary of State Schulz has offered a clear explanation to the American people of why retaining the option to conduct field tests of "strategic defenses" was so important as to preclude agreement in Iceland on both deep strategic weapons cuts and intermediate-range missiles. The heart of the matter is whether the United States needs the SDI program to deter a Soviet first-strike.

What people often forget is that each one of our ballistic missile submarines carries enough multiple warhead missiles to destroy all the cities in the Soviet Union. Thus, we already have an effective deterrent without SDI. Our military leaders assure us that these submarines are undetectable and, therefore, invulnerable.

Moreover, even if the SDI were eventually successful, it would not offer protection to any of our strategic missile systems from low-flying cruise missiles that do not leave the earth's atmosphere.

At a minimum, those who participated in the Iceland talks should be willing to move beyond the pressures of domestic politics and explain to us in specific terms why the SDI is so crucial to our security.

Walk vicious dogs at 4 in the morning

To the editor:

As I was walking down Langley Road after leaving the Park behind Bowen Elementary in Newton-Centre this morning I was greeted with the vicious bark and lunge of a "friendly" German Shephard. The owner of the dog was speaking with the crosswalk attendant who helps children who at the hour of 7:50 a.m. or thereabouts are on their way to school. Most of these children are about the same height or slightly taller than the shoulders of this "friendly" dog.

The woman-master, I assume, had to hold the dog back from me as I approached from a distance of about ten feet. It would be my suggestion that those who would choose to own vicious-borderline attack dogs consider walking them between the hours of 2 and 4 a.m. when they will not be a threat to people who choose to walk on our neighborhood sidewalks. I also highly suggest that you avoid walking your dog or having your dog walk you-whichever-during those hours when children are passing between home and classes.

And to the lady who ran down the side street toward the apartment building please, do not impose your means for dealing with threat in your life on the safety and well being of others who choose not to own "friendly" dogs. To possess this fearful mentality has implications which reach far beyond the threat of a tentanus shot. For the time being, your exercising good judgement will suffice.

Human rights 'champions' ignoring Nicaragua

To the editor:

Open-minded readers should commend The Newton Graphic for publishing the article, "The Sandinistas are Ravaging the Population of Nicaragua", by Dana Smith (Oct. 15 1986)

The majority of the news media - naively? - has been touting the "people's" revolution and its "democratic" achievements, but Dana Smith's article is a sobering, horrific reminder of what is really happening in Nicaragua: the people have been despoiled by a Simon-pure Communist government.

One startling, eye-witness report bears grim testimony to the plight of the people: in some factories, the workers have pleaded that they be paid in food; the former staples - rice and beans - have mysteriously disappeared. Stalin's old tactic of starving a people into submission is enjoying a huge success in today's Nicaragua: one toes the party line or goes to bed hungry.

In 1978, the newspaper, La Prensa, was a strident voice of protest against the dictator, Somoza. Its director, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, was assassinated by direct orders from Somoza.

That same newpaper, silenced five times in one year by Ortega and his cronies, has been shut down for good.

It is interesting to note that Daniel Ortega is welcomed as a saviour by the United States and is allowed to speak freely, but he denies freedom of speech in his own country. Where and when possible, his consulates in other countries deny it abroad.

Recently, a former leader of the Nicaraguan revolution, disillusioned by the Communist take-over, fled into exile and is attempting to show the world the under-side of the Nicaraguan experiment. But he was hooted, jeered, and pelted into silence in Barcelona, Spain. A communist, "pro-Nicaraguan" group made certain that the truth was not revealed.

It is the essence of Communism to bury the truth at home, and deny or distort it abroad.

The Nicaraguan people and others must be wondering why so many "champions" of human rights are turning their backs - and closing their eyes - to the glaring truth in Nicaragua.

In regard to Nicaragua, the moral conscience of mankind is strangely silent.

The 'Louisville Slugger'

A new management tool

Roger Simon

Call it the Louisville Slugger School of Management. Call it the greatest motivational tool since the death threat.

Or call it a very, very dangerous trend if it catches on with our bosses.

Bill Regardie, 45, is a magazine publisher in Washington, D.C. He recently made all the gossip columns there by picking up a baseball bat and smashing the office of an employee who had displeased him.

We could dismiss this as the act of one eccentric individual, except that Regardie now reports at least 50 chief executives from around the nation have contacted him to say: "Way to go, Bill! I wish (ital) I (unital) could do that!"

I do a free-lance column for Mr. Regardie's magazine, cleverly called "Regardie's," but do not work for him directly and therefore have always stayed out of his bat range.

I called him for this interview. Calling seemed safer.

Me: Does it trouble you that many people will think you are a little odd for picking up a bat and using it on someone's office?

Regardie: What do I care? Besides, I think it really hit a responsive chord with a lot of people.

Me: Describe the bat.

Regardie: A Louisville Slugger. Henry Aaron model.

Me: And you decided to smash apart this guy's office with it because he was late in getting his job done?

Regardie: Yes, that's right. What it comes down to is my feeling that each person requires a different motivation.

Me: So one day you just fly into a rage and start blasting away?

Regardie: Oh, no. I had been thinking about this all weekend.

Me: You keep bats around the house?

Regardie: It was my son's bat. But it was not his favorite bat. I made sure. I picked it up and walked to my car and drove to the office. While I drove I kept fondling the handle. And smiling.

Me: So you go into guy's office and he is there or not there?

Regardie: He is not there and I pick out my first target. A light box. This is a steel box with a translucent glass top and light from underneath for looking at negatives. And I want it. I really want it. I know it's really going to feel good.

Me: Do you have a batting glove on?

Regardie: No, I'm barehanded. I was going to bring my golf glove, but I wanted to feel it, you know? Feel the wood?

Me: So you take your grip.

Regardie: I take my grip over my right shoulder and I'm a little nervous, but good nervous. I am standing over the light box and at that moment, well, at that moment I really knew what mental illness was all about.

Me: I am sure many will agree with you about that. So you go for it.

Regardie: I swing the bat right-to-left and down. I am not choking up on the handle. I've got full extension, maximum power.

Me: And?

Regardie: It. Was. Wonderful. It was ... sex. It was this feeling of spreading warmth. It was exactly like when you ....

Me: I think we get the idea.

Regardie: There was this explosion of glass. An audible gasp from across the room. I take it all in for a moment, savoring it. Then I go for the lamp next. And then the desk. But the desk really rocks me. This is a custom made desk and I really get jolted. There is no way to get a bat through a desk.

Me: I'm surprised they don't teach that at the Harvard Business School. So are you stymied?

Regardie: No, I go for the legs. I am using golf strokes. I am calm and methodical. I have maybe taken 25 good strokes and I am about to go for the guy's $600 ergonomic chair, the one it took him two years to find, when the bat breaks.

Me: So your work is done.

Regardie: I throw the handle to the floor in front of the wreckage. I am in this euphoric calm. And I look up. And the staff is standing there open-mouthed. Stunned.

Me: You mean they've never seen a grown man destroy a few thousand dollars' worth of furniture with a bat before? Where do you find these people?

Regardie: The guy comes in about 20 minutes later and I explain things and he orders new furniture and six days later he quits. But I'd hire him back in a second. The guy is brilliant, a genius. I was just trying to make a point.

I regard this as a great motivator. I have ordered 100 Louisville Sluggers and I am sending them out to executives around the nation as Christmas presents. They all will say "Management Tool" on them.

Me: Are there any rules you have for this?

Me: Anything else?

Regardie: Swing firm, keep your eye on the target and don't try to kill it. Just make good, solid contact.

Me: Thank you.

Regardie: Thank you.

Panel to pursue study of grade reorganization

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — One School Committee member has challenged the wisdom of possibly reopening Bigelow Junior High School and reorganizing the system's grade structure in face of reported public hysteria.

Gerald Bazer tried to persuade his colleagues to abandon discussion and consideration of the issue because the 1985 School Committee decided grade reorganization was not a sound alternative to the space crunch in the schools.

It appears that the committee "doesn't know what it's doing or where it's going" on this issue, he said. Other members disagreed with his assessment.

The committee is considering reopening Bigelow to accomodate a change from a junior high to a middle school system. A middle school would lump together grades six, seven and eight.

"Last spring we voted to close Bigelow and now we're turning around and looking at that decision again," Bazer said. "It troubles me that we are being inconsistent and the community's anxieties over this are mounting. We're leaving ourselves open to be publicly clobbered."

Bazer said he could justify reconsidering grade reorganization had it been studied more than five years ago. But it was considered and turned down by the committee only 18 months ago.

Space needs in the schools should not be the thrust behind the committee's decision to reopen Bigelow and restructure the grade system, he said. Educational issues should be the sole criteria.

Space needs and educational issues cannot be separated because they are deeply intertwined, responded committee member Lynne Sullivan.

"Space is an educational issue when you're considering class size and teacher-student ratios," she said. "I don't know how more room can be created in the schools without considering this alternative."

Member Sally Rizzo, who supports grade reorganization, said it is educationally sound. If the committee shows some "vision of what it wants," the community will probably respond favorably, she said.

"This issue has taken on a life of its own and I know most of us have been bombarded with letters and phone calls, but I feel we do have direction," she said.

> 'There is going to be criticism out there which is somewhat justified. But that's not a good enough reason to stop in our tracks.'
> Leonard Gentile

Public hysteria should not control the committee's decision on this issue, said member Angela Nielsen. The public is "operating on the basis of ignorance." The committee's job is to educate them, she added.

The committee is not just considering reopening a school, it is contemplating changing the "fabric of the system" through grade reorganization, Bazer said.

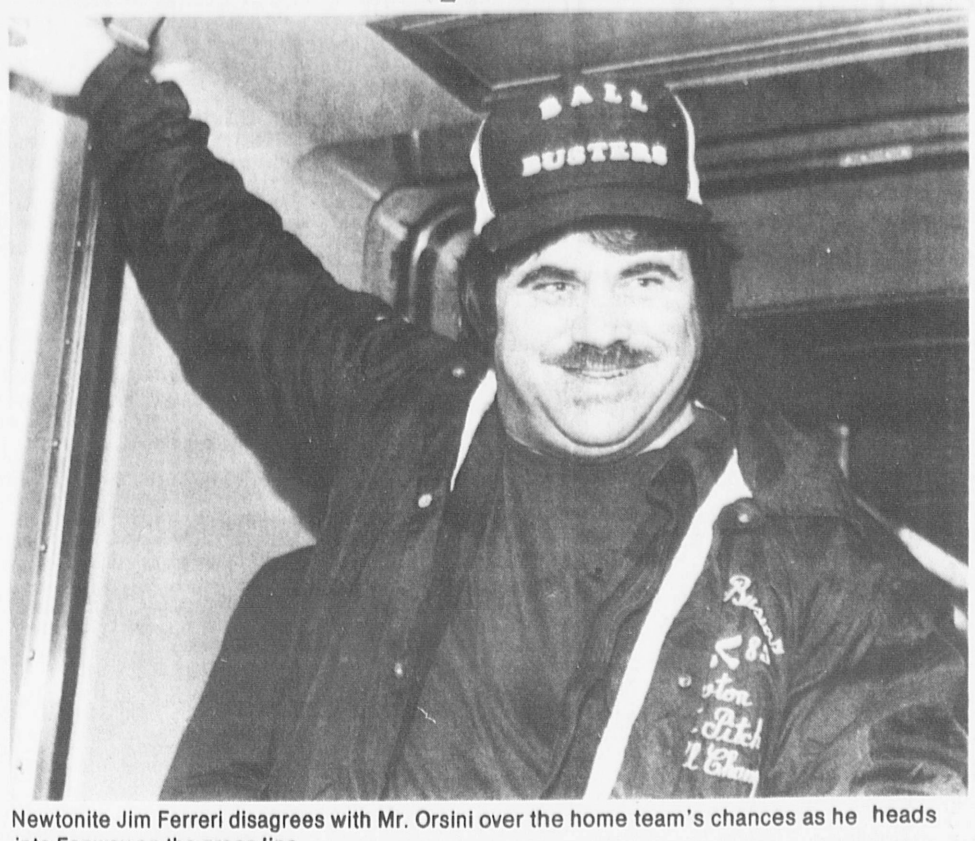
Chairman Leonard Gentile said the committee has every right to reconsider this issue despite public criticism.

"I don't think it would be wise to close discussion on this," he said. "There is going to be criticism out there which is somewhat justified. But that's not a good enough reason to stop in our tracks."

A decision on this issue is expected sometime in January. The committee will hold a public hearing on grade reorganization before a recommendation is made by the administration.

'Sox can still break your hearts'

COMMENTARY
By Les Orsini
Staff Writer



Newtonite Jim Ferreri disagrees with Mr. Orsini over the home team's chances as he heads into Fenway on the green line.

The Red Sox are going to break your heart and you're going to love every minute of it. After all, you're from Boston and you need the sad, sick melodrama of seeing the Red Sox on the brink of redemption, only to tumble into the abyss of defeat.

Once every decade they take you on a roller coaster ride that can end only in a crash each time you go along.

Then you call them bums, swear never to watch another game and feel sorry for yourself for years — only to line up for another Red Sox hosing 10 years later.

This time it's Boston against New York and you're still dreaming, especially after blowing out the Mets in the first two games. Remember Bucky Dent? This World Series is a psychic set-up. If it were a bust, a law student could get you off by pleading entrapment.

I know all about Boston and New York. I was raised in Meriden, Conn., exactly halfway between the rotten core of the Big Apple and the rusty axle of the Hub.

There's nothing healthier than hitching a ride with a winner and we were all Yankee fans back then. We had Mantle, Maris, Ford, and Yogi and won seven World Championships. You had Ted Williams and won nothing.

The Yankees fell apart around the same time the Sox first did it to you — the Impossible Dream, 1967. I had to decide where to go to college and thought Boston was the next dynasty.

I know you lost to the Cards in seven games, but what was I supposed to do — move to St. Louis? Anyway, I thought the times in Boston were a changin'.

Well, they weren't and they didn't.

Nineteen years later you still don't have a thing but sad memories. Me? I'm getting off the Soxwagon. I'm tired of the self-pity, the masochistic delights.

But there's no escape for the native Red Sox fan, the true Bostonian, certified "born to lose."

Historically, you're a serious bunch and like your New England dinners boiled. You have no idea how to loosen up when it comes to emotion. You'd prefer outrage and tears to laughter and joy.

It might surprise you to know that people are different elsewhere. Take the Apple, for example. New Yorkers want nothing but a good time and right now the party is the Mets.

Memories are short in Good Gotham. They don't care that the Mets once lost 120 games in a single year, have only won one World Series and have spent the bulk of their history in the musty National League cellar.

If nothing's doing at Shea or Yankee Stadium during a given season, they go out and spray paint a subway train, steal a car or knock over a liquor store. No hard feelings, Pal.

But you're stuck by tradition. Look, I'm talking history here.

In 1620, the Pilgrims fled England to escape religious persecution. Many died that first winter in Plymouth harbor. But they had their freedom. Very serious stuff.

The Dutch came to New York to make a buck. They immediately established their credentials by fleecing some of the locals out of Manhattan for a few dollars worth of trinkets. Whatta deal.

Bostonians know the shot heard round the world was fired by Minutemen in Concord determined to free the colonies from English tyranny without representation. Very important stuff.

New Yorkers believe Bobby Thomson fired the shot heard round the world when he slammed a home run that defeated the Brooklyn Dodgers in the ninth inning of a 1951 playoff game. Simply amazin'.

What I'm saying has nothing to do with the Sox themselves. Rice, Boggs, Clemens, Hurst, the Can — a fine group of ballplayers. Just ask Cleveland if it would like to have them.

But how can they possibly win the big one in the depression and malaise hovering over Fenway Park? Bad vibes from fans who — unbeknownst to themselves — want the Olde Towne Team to lose, make the Sox bats heavy, turn their legs into lead and stop fly balls just short of the wall.

Meanwhile, the goodwill of Gotham fans lifts the Mets to victory.

Don't expect any sympathy from me when the Sox lose in seven. In fact, I won't even be watching. I'm going to be, ah, mowing my lawn. Yeah, that's it. Mowing my lawn in late October.

I won't watch one single inning of it. Well, maybe the games Clemens pitches. No more though. Just the games when Roger is on the mound ... and maybe the Can.

Yeah. I might watch when the Can is pitching but other than that, forget it.

I'm just going to watch the Can and Roger. And Bruce Hurst. Did I say I was going to watch Bruce Hurst, too? He's great. The guy has really had good stuff lately. The Mets won't be able to touch him.

This could be it, man. This could be the year for the Sox...

New contract for overdue project

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The $1.2 million Newton Corner traffic improvement project has sputtered and stalled for almost two years. A Quincy construction company has now taken over the job and expects to get work rolling this week.

Scott Pickard, spokesman for the state Department of Public Works (DPW), last week said John McCourt and Company has been awarded the contract to complete work on Washington Street and adjoining roadways in Newton Corner.

The company is scheduled to finish by Dec. 18, sparing motorists the hazards of driving on unfinished roadways during icy winter months.

The DPW is confident McCourt can complete the job before freezing temperatures make work impossible, Pickard said. "I don't think it's too late for what they have to do," he said.

Asked if he can meet that deadline, Richard McCourt, president of the company, said, "I think so. I'm sure we can. It'll be substantially completed by the end of November and fully completed by the first of the year."

McCourt has taken over construction approximately two months after the DPW fired the original contractor, Baker and Company of Stoughton, because little or no progress was being made.

The state had originally hoped for an October 1985 completion, but then extended the deadline to June 30 when it became apparent Baker would not be done by then.

When that date passed, the state began to make threatening noises and finally fired Baker in late August, forcing its bonding company, Aetna Life & Casualty, to find a new general contractor.

All the while, motorists have been complaining the half-completed job has become a nuisance and a safety hazard. Traffic has snarled there as drivers tried to navigate streets with unmarked lanes and tires have been slashed by manhole covers sticking a couple of inches above the road surfaces.

City officials feared things would only get worse if work was not finished by winter.

State challenged over mandatory retirement government's Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). But it could take months for the agency to investigate his case, if it takes action at all.

The federal measure and a similar bill in the Statehouse had given Curry hope he would not have to leave his job in 10 days. The state legislation has stalled in the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

Each bill would prohibit mandatory retirements based on age for many jobs.

"I was always thought that federal laws supersede the state and that the state cannot take away any freedoms the federal government gave," Curry told aldermen. "All they can do is grant you more."

Aldermen, at a loss to explain why the federal measure would not save Curry's job, urged the city to retain the worker while he pursues his complaint.

Alderman Vern Vance, chairman of the Legislation and Rules Committee, said the federal law might not apply because municipal employees are governed by state statutes.

But he said he would have to see the bill to determine what effect, if any, it would have on Curry's case. "I'd hate to give a definitive answer or even an indication," Vance said.

In general, Vance said he opposes across-the-board, mandatory retirements based on age, but a distinction should be drawn between public and private sector jobs.

The business community must be healthy, creating enough jobs for young people if older employees are to work as long as they want, he said. But he added municipalities cannot afford to lose experienced workers simply because of age. Local governments must judge on a case-by-case basis each employee's fitness to continue work beyond 65.

The resolution — introduced by Alderman Richard McGrath — may not save Curry's job, but at least it will send a message to the state Legislature, Alderman Paul Coletti said.

"We support his efforts to continue work," said Coletti. "That's what keeps people alive in today's economy."

State Representative David Cohen, who came to the Monday night meeting for a different issue, talked with Curry about his case. Cohen, D-Newton, said he would try to find out why the state bill has stalled in the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

New GBPC accounts uncovered

Meeting House Cooperative Bank & Trust Company in Boston and the Boston brokerage firm of Moseley, Hallgarten, Estabrook & Weeden Inc.

Now, Dineen said, money also has been traced to another Boston brokerage firm — Smith, Barney, Harris, Upham & Co. Inc.

Funds also have been linked to two other area banks in which Coogan had personal and business accounts, Dineen said. The banks were not among those listed on the GBPC's original complaint.

Information documenting Coogan's connection to several two-way radio enterprises also has been uncovered.

Dineen said the funds involved in those ventures were used to gain a controlling interest in telecommunication firms and to buy the equipment needed to build transmitting stations.

Several depositions have been taken, but sessions with Coogan and Ackerman have not yet been scheduled.

Dineen said one of the depositions involved James Gable, who runs a Hyannis-area construction company, because he was Coogan's partner in a Cape Cod real estate venture.

Also deposed was Richard Locke, from whom Coogan allegedly bought two-way radio equipment and a Federal Communications Commission license. Locke said the equipment and radio license was sold to a joint venture that included Coogan and Ackerman, according to Dineen.

He said one deposition session has already taken place and another is scheduled with Richard Quintel, the Bay State representative of E.F. Johnson Inc., a major radio equipment supplier.

Coogan and Ackerman may have purchased supplies from E.F. Johnson with some of the money stolen from the GBPC, Dineen added.

Board seeks new members

Joint effort against drugs

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A plan to include about one dozen Garden City police officers in a regional anti-drug task force won unanimous initial approval from the aldermanic Public Safety and Transportation Committee last week.

If approved by the Board of Aldermen next week, Newton would join Waltham, Watertown and Weston in a centralized program of sharing personnel, equipment and communications in an effort to put a dent in local drug traffic.

The Mutual Aid program would allow officers from one of the four communities to do undercover work in any of the other four communities. That, according to Police Chief William Quinn, gives police an edge against drug dealers.

"Most sophisticated drug dealers in this city know who our detectives are," he said. "With this program, we can have officers from other communities come in without being known to help make drug busts."

The same, he added, goes for equipment.

"They know our cars," he said. "This way, we can have different cars on drug raids, giving us a better element of surprise."

In addition, Quinn said the four communities will centralize drug surveillance by sharing communications. And, Quinn said all four communities will benefit by sharing advanced police equipment. Newton, he said, will make available its infrared night vision device.

If last week's 4-to-0 vote was any indication, approval by the full Board of Aldermen could be swift.

Athletics and drugs don't mix

By Ken Brack
Correspondent

NEWTONVILLE — It's official now: Athletes at Newton North High School who use alcohol or other drugs during an athletic season risk grave consequences.

Likewise, Newton North Athletic Director T. J. Williams made it clear that prevention will be the focus of coaches' efforts throughout his school and the school system.

Speaking to about 100 student-athletes and a handful of parents and coaches in the high school auditorium last week, Williams said the school has officially adopted a chemical health policy started by the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) last year.

"Drugs in athletics at Newton North are simply not acceptable," Williams told the crowd, sketching a four-point plan to guide coaches and students.

"First, we (coaches) must practice what we preach, and we must have the motivation to get involved and commit ourselves to this problem," Williams said. Also, he said "athletes must seek knowledge from many sources about the true effects of drugs, and parents and coaches must be action-oriented to let students know what the consequences are."

The drug policy adopted by the school states, "during the season of practice or play, a student shall not, regardless of quantity, use or consume, possess, buy/sell or give away any beverage containing alcohol, marijuana or any controlled substance."

The penalties include a loss of eligibility for the next two athletic events or two weeks of play for the first offense, and ineligibility for 12 events or 12 weeks — whichever is greater — for the second offense.

After a second or subsequent violation the student may rejoin MIAA activities after a minimum of six weeks if he or she participates in an approved chemical dependency program, the policy states.

Athletic Director of Quincy High School Martin Finnegan also spoke to the students, saying the key to combatting the drug problem is communication between students, their parents and coaches.

"We forget three little words: 'I love you.' How many times do you say that to someone who is drinking too much or gets behind a wheel? Sometimes we don't have the gumption to say 'I don't like what you're doing,'" Finnegan said.

The students also heard a hulking, 6-foot-4 professional football player formerly with the New York Jets talk about his problems with drugs, including cocaine and heroin.

"It started in high school when I thought I could have a few beers here and there or a few bones (marijuana cigarette) after the game, but in reality it had me in its grasp, not the other way around," Brian Donahue said.

The All-American track and football star at the University of Texas — who said he was Roger Clemens' roomate in college — said if he "had communicated better with coaches and friends," today he would not be a recovering drug addict and alcoholic.

As the brooding, yet eloquent dirty-blonde haired athlete related some of his "days in hell," the crowd audibly tensed up and the few giggles heard earlier vanished.

"Just do the right thing and do it for yourselves," Donahue said before leaving the auditorium stage with his brother Jack, an admitted former drug abuser and dealer who also spoke on the dangers of starting young with alcohol and marijuana.

Contacted after the speeches, Girls Freshman Soccer Coach Stephanie Stoyanoff said there seems to be "less peer pressure here (at the high school) now than there used to," allowing students to better understand the choices and often "make the right choice."

Varsity Football Coach Peter Capodilupo said it was good for his players to hear the comments and hear myths about alcohol and other drugs shattered.

> 'It's a perverse thing when alcohol is associated with everything in the universe that's positive ... but it actually sucks life out from us.'
> Peter Capodilupo

"It's a perverse thing when alcohol is associated with everything in the universe that's positive — even beer at the games at (old) Schaefer stadium — but it actually sucks life out from us," Capodilupo said. The coach said the football team and most of the other school teams have been following their own drug policies, but now there will be one uniform policy.

Junior Varsity Soccer Coach Walter Birchler said the school hopes the athletes will make appropriate choices and "if they are really the school leaders, it should filter out to the rest of the school."

Birchler said the coaches are trying not to preach to the students, "but give them a choice, because later they will have to make it on their own without adults or coaches around."

like Memorial, Spaulding and Cabot have the same problem. This class size issue and the space problems have to be looked at in the full context of the problem. If we do it for one school, other schools will want us to do the same."

The committee's comments did little to appease the parents — nor did a teacher aid assigned to the class to reduce the student-teacher ratio.

"Adding one more body in that small space is not the solution," parent Charina Lynn said. "When my child, along with many others, has to move into the corridor for reading period because there isn't another class for them, I find it objectionable."

Supt. John Strand said he did not find the conditions objectionable, and he referred to makeshift remedies like reading in the corridor "resourceful."

"We have been dealing with the class size issue for several years," he said. "There is no question it would be preferable to split the class, but I reject the notion that the education of these children is suffering."

Barbara Schildkrout, a teacher at Ward, called the situation a "disservice to students." She described the relationship between teacher and young elementary school children as something "magical" that these students are being cheated of.

"I'm pleading with you to seriously consider and look at this situation so a cozier environment can be fostered and these children can perform to potential," she said.

Parent Louis Lutin said for the first time his son's grades and enthusiasm is slipping.

"I asked my son if he thought the size of the class was a problem and do you know what he said? 'Only when there is a fire drill'," Lutin said. "I don't know about you, but I find that frightening."

The school system has "flunked" by its own standards, according to parent David Lynn.

Committee chairman Leonard Gentile said the School Department cannot decide issues solely on emotions.

"These issues always get emotional when children are involved," he said. "We don't like to say no, but there are so many other things that come into play here that we have to seriously consider."

Reopen Hyde to ease overcrowding

cussions we imagined two years ago that would result from closing Hyde are happening right now. Our worst nightmares are coming true."

If the committee decides to reopen Bigelow, it would cost about $600,000 a year, he said. According to a Building Department estimate, it would cost $30,000 to get the Hyde back in shape and $267,000 to operate it.

"I wrote a letter proposing the Hyde alternative and its cost efficiency to (Supt.) Strand two weeks ago and I haven't heard a word," Mansfield said. "The bottom line as I said in the letter is that Strand and the School Committee have to admit a mistake was made by closing the Hyde. Reopening it is the only sensible alternative."

Mansfield also said he sent copies of the letter to all committee members and only one, Sally Rizzo, responded.

Newton Highlands resident Elizabeth Barker, who vehemently opposed closing the Hyde two years ago, described the school department's administrative decisions as "insanity."

"Hyde was a full-sized school that was not under-enrolled," she said. "The fact is they are desperate for space in the elementary schools and they need the space soon. Reopening Hyde is the quickest and most sensible way to solve this problem."

Barker argues that two elementary schools — Hyde and Oak Hill — should never have been closed simultaneously. The students from those two schools are being fed into many of the same receiver schools where there is overcrowding. It would have made more sense closing only one, she said.

"The School Committee is trying at all cost, to avoid looking at the Hyde alternative. They're afraid to touch it," Barker said. "Instead, they will look at rediculous solutions that will only create one more headache after another."

North's tiger prowls through crowd

Yes, there are pitfalls in the life of a tigress, but Goldberg would have it no other way.

"I'm proud to be one of the Newton North Tigers," she says with determination. "We don't have a very spirited crowd, but we're working on it."

Goldberg, with fellow mascots Barri Kausman and Jenifer Fine, auditioned to become tigresses earlier this year.

Although the competition wasn't very tight ("Only four people showed up.") and the credentials were minimal ("We had to roar."), Goldberg remains proud of her achievement.

"My friends think it's great," she says. "No one's grossed out by it."

Goldberg and her two companions will be roaring for all they're worth when North's football team (1-4) takes on Cambridge, Rindge and Latin at Dickinson Field this Saturday.

According to police, the girls were walking down the street toward Village Road around 12:30 a.m. when three men jumped out of a Cadillac and grabbed one of them by the throat. The men wanted the girls to get into the car with them, but the girls escaped and ran to Village Road where they called the police. Neither girl was seriously hurt.

Weekend break-ins reported

NEWTON — Six homes were broken into Friday, and another house break was reported to police early Sunday morning.

An Otis Street home was broken into between 9:30 a.m. and 3:15 p.m. Friday while no one was home. The thief jimmied open a ground floor window and took a VCR, color TV and jewelry.

On Chestnut Street a thief cut a hole in the screen over a rear window, then reached in and unlocked the door next to it. Police said the thief disturbed only the master bedroom, taking about $200 worth of jewelry. Many other valuables were left behind, said police.

A rear window was the port of entry for a thief on Anthony Road also. A screen was cut and the window was forced open between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., said police. Taken were two stereo receivers, a 35-millimeter camera, a jug of change, $100 in cash and one gold earring.

Assorted pieces of jewelry were stolen out of a Kenneth Street home between 3 p.m. and 9:40 p.m. after the intruder broke a window in a rear door and unlocked it. A case of liquor also was taken, but was later found outside the house.

Nearby on High Street, two homes were broken into. A thief forced open a ground floor window and stole a color TV and a number of pewter figurines of animals. A suitcase full of valuable Hummel figures was left behind, leading police to believe the occupants of the house may have scared the thief away when they came home at 9:30 p.m.

While police were getting the report on the first house on High Street, they found another house a couple doors down the road also had been broken into. A small glass pane was broken out of a door, allowing the intruder to reach in and unlock it. It was unknown whether anything was stolen because the home's occupants were out.

Shortly after midnight Sunday, police received a report of an apartment break on Elliot Street. The resident said the break must have occurred between Thursday afternoon and Saturday evening, but it took some time to notice the missing items, which were a 35-millimeter camera and assorted jewelry. Police said the thief apparently entered the building through an unlocked side door, then jimmied a latch on a doorway to the second floor apartment.

Transcript home show and cooking school in Needham Monday, Nov. 3

Transcript Newspaper's 5th Annual Homemakers Show-Cooking School will take place Monday, Nov. 3, at Needham High School Auditorium with graduate home ecoonomist Diane Gryger White acting as host for the third consecutive year.

Jarvis Appliances of Wellesley will again supply the major home appliances that will transform the stage of the auditorium into an ultra modern kitchen with range, microwave oven, refrigerator and other appliances that will enable White to perform her cooking magic.

Audiences in prior years have thoroughly enjoyed watching the recipes created right on stage as well as being delighted with the finished masterpieces shown at the conclusion of the show and awarded as door prizes. The 2-1/2 hour program includes food preparation, kitchen hints and appliance demonstrations.

Every attendee will receive a complimentary 1986 edition of "Today's Home" cookbook. Following the recipes demonstrated is easy to do with no need to write ingredients and procedures. The only notes necessary are personal memos, that way the audience can concentrate on the demonstrations on stage and enjoy the show.

Transcript's Homemaker Show-Cooking School is produced with the cooperation of Homemakers School of Madison, Wisc., producers of more than 300 shows annually across the country.

Some of the nationally recognized sponsors of the show include: Baker's Coconut, Blue Bonnet Margerine, Fleischmann's Yeast, Hershey's Chocolate, Minute Tapioca, Nilla Wafers, Reese's Peanut Butter Chips, Saran Brand Plastic Wrap, Sunbeam Appliances, Velveeta Cheese, and Ziploc Brand Plastic Bags.

Tickets to the Homemakers Show-Cooking School are free and may be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelop to the Transcript office; tickets may also be picked up in person. There is a limit of two tickets per request so that seating may be as distributed equitably as possible on a first come basis.

Transcript Newspaper's address is P.O. Box 70, 420 Washington St., Dedham, Ma. 02026.

Men's sensitivy seminar stood up

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

NEWTON — Music played. A bar and refreshment table were rolled in. And enough chairs to seat 100 people were set up.

In the front of the room, pacing about the podium, Tom Calf and his business partner, Marie DeVincent, awaited the arrival of the guests.

But like a date who never shows, Calf and Marie DeVincent were ... er ... stood up.

Last week, Calf, a 42-year-old Waltham resident, and DeVincent, 34, of Newton, rented the Gateway North Ballroom at the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge in Newton Corner to hold their first seminar, "Sensible Sensuality Tactics."

Due to the lack of an audience, the seminar, billed "for men only," didn't fare too well at its debut.

"I think men involved in relationships don't think they need help. Anything, like this (seminar), which tampers with a man's psyche is bound to scare them off. Men are afraid to find out that they're not good lovers," he said. "Next time we'll invite women, too. That way it will take some of the pressure off of the men to attend."

In a world of singles dances, dating clubs and personal ads, the notion of a relationship seminar might appear as just another money-making gimmick.

But according to Calf and DeVincent, people involved in the singles scene of the 80s lack two important elements needed for a successful relationship: Love and caring.

And the seminar, Calf said, teaches men how to achieve the two in their relationships with women.

Despite the lack of mingling single males, Calf and DeVincent conducted their own mini-seminar for a reporter and a Howard Johnson's bartender, both eager to learn the tricks of the pick-up trade.

"There is a lack of romance, a lack of caring in today's relationships," Calf said. "Treat women as women. Stop treating them as sex objects. You don't have to be macho; you don't have to be a faker. Just be yourself, be natural, be creative."

Men must be straightforward and sincere in their approach to women, according to Calf. And the result is "women chasing you for a change."

"Love, caring, companionship — men are missing this," he said. "Men who become passionate attract passionate women."

One theory Calf has developed to help men become more successful with women is the C.S.O. Approach.

The "C" is for "challenging" assumptions. Too often men assume that a woman is too beautiful or intelligent to be interested in him, he says. "When I was younger I went to a dance and asked 23 girls in a row to dance, and each one rejected me. I was going bananas. But I persisted. And the 24th girl I asked accepted," he says, moving excitedly about the floor. "You can't be afraid to fail. You must overcome your fear of failure. If you are yourself, and get rejected, you have nothing to be ashamed of."

The "S" in the approach requires men to "shift" their focus from sex to sincerity when trying to strike up a relationship with a woman. "Don't gawk at her body when she has a beautiful mind. Shift your focus from physical to mental."

The "O" in the C.S.O. Approach stands for "outrageousness," something, Calf says, that some men fail to use while trying to develop a relationship with a woman.

"You've got to do silly things. Get crazy. Get her attention. Once I wrote a letter to a woman after our first date, saying 'You really knocked my socks off.' And I sent her a pair of socks in a bag!" he said.

Calf said men's attitudes toward women are "because of the focus in society. It's been going on for years, and it hasn't been interrupted."

"Men need help," DeVincent said simply. "I've been out there, and I know. Some lay on the basic pick up lines like, 'Do you come here often?' while others just ask too many questions. I've talked to women, and they say men don't understand their needs. And to make it worse, there's no communication. We need to break down the barriers between men and women."

To that, Calf added: "Know yourself, know what you want, and go after it in a gentle, persistent way."

For more information regarding the "Sensible Sensuality Tactics" seminar, call Calf at 899-3719.

NEWTON — The month of October has been designated Crime Prevention Month.

Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn states, "The theme of Crime Prevention Month 1986 is Watch Out, Help Out."

This positive, take-action approach involves "watching out," making homes more secure, teaching children emergency numbers, reporting suspicious activity; and "helping out," neighbors looking out for each other and becoming involved in crime prevention programs which lead to stronger more cohesive neighborhoods.

Now in its fourth year, Crime Prevention Month has grown into an international celebration of the fact that, by working together, citizens can do something to reduce crime and the fear it breeds.

The percentage of Newton households touched by crime fell to the lowest level in a decade in 1985, according to the Newton police.

Quinn states that overall crime has been substantially reduced and house breaks in Newton have decreased 50 percent during this 10 year period.

"In the final analysis," says Quinn, "we must make people throughout the city aware that crime prevention is not just stopping negative things from happening. It's starting something positive and proactive."

The chief offered the following crime prevention tips as a positive means of reducing crime in the city:

Check all windows and doors for security, including cellar windows and garage door before leaving home.

Arrange with a neighbor or relative to watch your home and let them know where and how you can be reached.

Make arrangements to have grass cut (driveway and walk shoveled in the winter). Have someone check daily to remove throw away papers and circulars from your doorway and yard.

Engrave your valuables through Operation Identification and record serial numbers.

Report anything unusual or suspicious to the police. Record license numbers of suspicious motor vehicles.

When out at night park your car in well lighted areas and lock the car doors.

When out walking or jogging stay alert. Keep your mind on your surroundings. Know who's in front and who's behind you and wear reflectorized outer clothing at night.

Keep purses and personal belongings under your control when shopping. Do not leave purses in shopping carts.

11,494 meals delivered fresh from city's ovens

NEWTON — As the song says: "On a Clear Day, You Can See Forever!"

That is true for most of us. We have a good idea what we are going to eat that day and where. However, there are a number of senior citizens who would not have anything of nutritional value, but for a group called "Traveling Meals." This organization operates out of a city noted for its compassion — not undeservedly so — The City of Newton.

For many years, this energetic team has planned and delivered hot meals, five days a week to those who await them eagerly. The lunches and dinners arrive — tied with a ribbon of love and caring attached. If this were not true — then "Traveling Meals" a not-for-profit agency, would not have fought so hard to survive the financial and other problems that beset it.

The following excerpt was taken from a letter sent to them in gratitude. Read on and judge for yourself:

"I'd like to say: People used to say — you get what you pay for, but I get much more than I pay for. I'm satisfied and content with the nice staff of volunteers who deliver the meals. Keep doing your good job!" (A minimal fee is paid by the recipient which barely covers the cost of the food and packaging.)

Here is a sample of recipients:

A.) Mrs. B., aged 92, uses a walker and managed to get around in her apartment until the day one of the faithful drivers showed up and had to rescue her from under her bed where she was trapped while trying to chase out a mouse.

B.) Mrs. L. was convinced to give up her meal preparation when she left her gas burner on all night. A social worker arranged to have deliveries of three meals on Fridays, so the weekend's supplies could be stored in a freezer. Her forgetfulness could then be erased, as a source of worry for all concerned for her welfare.

C.) Two clients, aged 85 and 94, complained of being lonesome. Our friendly drivers referred both to Retired Senior Volunteer Program for a possible match-up with someone in their Friendly Visitor Program.

And so it goes!

There are meetings held periodically during the year to help decide how best to enrich the contents of the meals in whatever manner possible. Drivers are selected for their awareness of the problems that beset elders. All can rest a little bit easier knowing that clients are checked up on at least five times a week.

It is not an easy feat to serve over 11,494 meals, which is the exact total through the end of August of this year. "Traveling Meals" are planned, prepared, packaged, and accomplished, so that all arrives fresh, warm and ready for hungry, eager hands.

Uncertain as life is, it is possible that "Traveling Meals" might be called upon to assist someone close to you. If that need should arise, be assured "Traveling Meals" can put your mind at ease regarding the nutritional needs of your parent, friend, or family member.

"Traveling Meals" is sponsored by the churches and temples of Newton. Interested parties, please contact Thomas Brehm at 332-5629.

Officers are: Nancy Cohen, President; Patricia Cantin, Vice-President; Theodora Najarian, Secretary; Howard Fowle, Treasurer; Thomas Brehm, Coordinator; Bernice Bennett, Public Relations. Out going directors are Mary Ranker, Gertrude Weinfeld, and Helen Brehm.

"Traveling Meals" welcomes all who would join their group in the spirit of volunteerism, especially needed are drivers.

Chrysanthemum exhibit

Thousands of giant Japanese chrysanthemums will be suspended from the ceiling of The Mall at Chestnut Hill as its Fifth Annual Cascading Chrysanthemums Exhibition is launched this month. Horticulturist Allen C. Haskell (above) is not able to pinpoint the exact date the chrysanthemums he grows for The Mall will be installed —weather is a determining factor in the flowering process.

Stress management class being offered

NEWTON — Newton resident Dr. Mary O'Brien, R.N., will present one of two free seminars on stress management, Thursday, Oct. 23, from 7 to 9 p.m. and eating for well-being, Wednesday, Oct. 29, from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

The seminars will be held at the Charlesbridge Center, Parker Building, 124 Watertown St. (Route 16), Watertown. There is free parking at the door.

O'Brien, staff psychologist at the center, will discuss how people with chronic gastrointestinal disorders can select the right foods to avoid discomfort and to achieve optimum well-being.

Dr. Karen Kurlander, will present the seminar on handling stress. A licensed psychologist, Kurlander will demonstrate how people with gastrointestinal disorders can reduce stress and make relaxation a greater part of their life.

How to recognize chronic illness as a source of tension will also be discussed.

For more information about both of these free programs, call the center at 923-7010.

The Charlesbridge Center teaches people who have chronic gastrointestinal difficulty to use proper nutrition and to handle stress for better management of their condition.

The center offers programs to meet the needs of persons with chronic intestinal disorders such as Crohn's, Colitis, Irritable Bowel Syndrome, Diverticulitis, and Ulcers.

NEWTON — A three day celebration honoring Luigi Pirandello, the Italian playwright and author, will take place Saturdays, Oct. 25, Nov. 1 and Nov. 7 at 7:30 p.m. at the Nonantum Branch of the Newton Free Library, corner Bridge and Watertown streets.

The celebration will feature Pirandello's plays, readings from his works, and a brief lecture.

"The License" and "The Exit," two one act plays, will be presented Saturday, Oct. 25.

On Nov. 1 there will be a lecture and a reading of "The Man with the Flower in his Mouth" and "The Jar."

The silent film "The Late Mattia Pascal" will be screened on Nov. 7. There will also be a panel discussion on Pirandello and his work.

Concord blitzes Lions, 46-9

By Paul Guggina

CONCORD — The Concord-Carlisle Patriots mixed a wondrous offense with an iron-clad defense, added a handful of spectacular kicks and opposing team blunders, and wound up with a 46-9 massacre of the Newton South Lions Saturday in Concord.

It was a home-crowd thriller from beginning to end. With the game barely three minutes old, Concord-Carlisle had amassed a 14-0 lead and the football hadn't touched turf beyond the Lions' 15 yard-line.

A Leroy Browne (12 rushes for 60 yards) fumble on the 12 in the opening moments of play resulted in a Patriots possession, and Concord-Carlisle wasted little time in completing a touchdown pass to senior Rick Mullins (14 yards rushing, 133 receiving). Mike Duggan's extra point kick was good, and the Patriots led 7-0 with just 1:30 gone on the clock.

Duggan's subsequent kickoff found its way to Newton South's 10 yard line. The Lions were unable to move the ball against the Patriots defense, and were forced to punt. Ben Burlingame's punt attempt, however, was blocked abd recovered in the end zone by Concord's Kevin Tobin. Duggan's point-after boot was good.

Eight minutes and two interceptions later, the lead had doubled. First, senior Torr Steinhilber intercepted a 20-yard Ben Burlingame (4-for-9, 92 yards passing) pass at the Patriots' 45 and ran it back to the Lions' five, where quarterback Willie Hicks (5-for-11, 178 yards) and running back Greg Mueller swapped positions, with Mueller passing to Hicks in the end zone.

On the next series, Steve Shepard had the honor of picking off another of Burlingame's passes at the Lions' 30, and was brought down at the 20. Meuller took over from there, and after three carries crossed the goalline.

Consecutive extra points by Duggan brought the total first-quarter damage toll to 28-0.

Things began to look up for the visiting team in the beginning of the second quarter. The Lions overcame a sack and two holding penalties in a 65-yard drive that culminated in a two-yard touchdown rush by junior half back Warren Rhone (14 carries for 56 yards). The drive was dominated by two 30-yard Burlingame passes — one to Browne and one to Jeff Brewington — and a 20-yard run by junior Rama Malone.

The Lions' bid for a miracle comeback quickly died, however, when Concord romped to the Lions' 20. After two incomplete passes by Hicks the sure-footed Duggan promptly scored a field goal.

The frustration of being on the wrong end of such a score began to show. Lions' co-captain John Hillis was ejected on the final play of the half for roughing Hicks after the Patriots' quarterback had completed a 40-yard touchdown pass play to Geoff Zentz.

By the time the first half mercifully came to a close, Concord-Carlisle held a 36-6 lead.

Thirty seconds into the third quarter, the nightmare began all over again. A Vasquez pass that was intended to be a short-yardage play turned into a 95-yard touchdown trot by Nick Boynton when the 160-pound senior broke past the Newton-South defense into open field.

Things began to settle down when junior Rodney Coleman came in to replace Hicks. The Newton South defense was able to force a punt.

The bad news is that punt wound up on the Lions' one yard line. The good news is the Lions were able to put together a convincing 90-yard drive that ended in a face-saving Burlingame field goal.

Wessel sets two pass reception records in 5th Bentley triumph

WALTHAM — West Newton's Paul Wessel caught two touchdown passes, including a 97-yarder, and Waltham's Peter Flori scored two others as Bentley College ripped visiting MIT Saturday, 35-13, before a homecoming crowd of 1,500.

The unbeaten Falcons have now won five straight, and the Bentley streak will be severely tested Friday night (7 p.m.) when also-unbeaten Southeastern Massachusetts University visits the Bentley Athletic Field to possibly decide the New England Collegiate Football Conference championship.

Wessel became the latest Falcon to write himself into the Bentley College school record books. The 6-0, 185-pound senior tri-captain out of Newton North High School caught three passes for a school-record 160 yards, and his 97-yard connection with freshman QB Kevin Lucey became the longest Bentley pass in school history and tied the mark for longest play from scrimmage.

Bentley started early, and the hard work paid off. By intermission, the Falcons had MIT on the ropes, leading, 22-6. Two more touchdowns in the third quarter buried the visitors.

Flori opened the scoring in the game after Robbie Howe had recovered an MIT fumble at visitors' 15 on only the second play from scrimmage. Flori rushed it to the one-yard line on first down, then punched it over on second down.

Dan Campbell added the kick to put the Falcons up, 7-0.

MIT cut the Bentley lead to one with a touchdown to close out the first quarter, but the Falcons rebounded with a Pat McGinn TD from one-yard out. McGinn had powered the seven-play, 64-yard scoring drive with runs of 19 and 22 yards.

Wessel scored his first touchdown, a 55-yard pass off the flea flicker from Lucey, to end the half.

Bentley defensive tackle Dan McCarthy, another Waltham product, recovered an MIT fumble at the visitors' eight and Flori took it into the end zone on the first play for a 29-6 lead.

The freshman Lucey would later connect with Wessel in the third quarter for his eighth touchdown pass of the season, tops in the NECFC. Overall, Lucey completed seven of 11 passes for 196 yards and no interceptions.

Bograd Lost Brook champ

Bogard successfully defended his club championship at the Lost Brook Golf Club a week ago by defeating Mike Hussan of Milton, 3 and 1, in the final. It was the second straight year Bogard has reigned as champion at the par 3 Norwood course.

On Sept. 11, Bogard won the AA Class Senior Championship of the Interstate Golf Association (IGA) on the Captain's Course in Brewster. Phil, who had a 16 handicap on the regulation course, had a net 69. He teamed up with Leo Paradise of Weymouth for a net 59 best ball to also capture team honors.

Bogard took up the game of golf seven years ago and plays regularly at Lost Brook where he carries a four handicap. His best round ever was a 59 without a handicap.

Kristiansen wins Tufts race

BOSTON – Ingrid Kristiansen, of Norway, won the Tufts 10K for Women in 31:40 held on Moday, Oct. 11. Lynn Jennings, winner of the first Columbus Day race in 1977, finished second in 32:29. Marty Cooksey finished third in 32:34.

Michele A. Hallet of Newton finished among the top 25. She placed 21st and was timed in 34:23.

Kristiansen started out fast, crossing the one mile mark at 4:39, 19 seconds under world record pace. She sustained the quick tempo, reaching the 2 mile mark at 14:32, 22 seconds under world record pace. Kristiansen began to slow at three miles; the wind from the east after the turnaround slowed the pace. Kristiansen said, "The wind factor added 30-40 seconds to my final time." Kristiansen presently holds the world record at the 5K, 10K, and marathon distances.

Close to 6,000 women competed in the 10th Columbus Day race for Women, sponsored by Tufts Associated Health Plan.

An endless sea of runners filled Beacon and Charles Streets at the start, waving and clapping to the race theme song "Celebration."

Tufts Associated Health Plan and its co-sponsoring hospitals including: Carney Hospital, Faulkner Hospital, Lawrence Memorial Hospital of Medford, New England Medical Center, Newton-Wellesley Hospital, Norwood Hospital, St. Joseph's Hospital of Lowell, Tufts University School of Medicine, sponsored the Tufts 10K for the second year, Their sponsorship exemplifies their dedication to promotion and achievement of healthier lifestyles for all.

Newton Catholic sweeps Cathedral

Angela Canty ran off seven straight points and Jennifer McLaughlin followed with a six-point string as Newton Catholic kept hold of its second-place staus with a convincing two-game sweep of host Cathedral Tuesday at the Cathedral High gym.

The Lancers, 9-2, disposed of the home team in no time, winning 15-4 and 15-6 behind the serving of Canty and McLaughlin.

Canty had her string in the first game while McLaughlin added her run on in the second game.

Falcon field hockey team cops 12th win

Colleen Wall and Amy DeCarolis combined for five goals to lead the undefeated Bentley field hockey team to a 7-0 rout of Westfield State Monday. The win sets a new school record for most victories at 12, one more than last year's squad could muster.

The Bentley team dominated in every phase of this one, outshooting Westfield State (5-8) by a phenomenal 27-1 margin.

The home team jumped to a 4-0 lead at the half on goals by DeCarolis, two by Wall, and Trish Scannell. Suzann Locke scored to open the second half, followed DeCarolis' second of the game. Wall capped the scoring barrage with her third of the game and 12th of the season.

Goalies Suzie Halpin and Sue Marciano were largely spectators, as Halpin had no shots against her and Marciano had but one (Kim Haglund).

Bentley is now third in Division III nationwide. They will face Notre Dame Wednesday at home (4 p.m.).

Volleyball

The volleyball team rolled over AIC Saturday in Springfield to tie a school record for most wins (24) in a season.The scores were 15-10, 15-5, 14-16 and 15-7.

Leading the onslaught for Bentley were Jennifer Ghiz with 19 kills, Maria Vicens with 15 kills, and Virginia Lee with seven ace serves.

The win lifts their NE-8 record to a perfect 4-0, and their overall record to 24-5. The girls will attempt to break the win record on Wendesday, when they play host to Assumption at 7 p.m.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team wound up on the losing end of a 3-2 score Saturday at Stonehill. The team battled back from a 2-0 deficit only to lose with under two minutes left in regulation.

A late first-half goal by Bill Foshay and another by Sam Stuckart (his 9th of the season) with 18 minutes left to play were not enough to stop Stonehill. With just 1:42 left in the game, Stonehill's Dan Cronin hooked up with Bill Retelle and Retelle scored to win it for the home team.

The loss leaves the team with a 1-4 record in the NE-8 and 2-13 overall. The team will play Northeastern Tuesday night at 7 p.m. at Bentley.

Men's Cross-country

The men's cross-country team accumulated 225 points to come in 8th out of a field of 18 at the Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Association Championships in New Britain, Conn., Saturday.

Paul Bolick fared best for Bentley, finishing 16th in the 5-mile competition with a time of 25:59, over a minute shy of the winner, Keene State's Rodney Ellsworth (24:41).

Providence College edged Keene, 27-30, to win the meet.

Women's Cross-Country

The women's team came in seventh out of nine colleges competing at the Holy-Cross Invitational in Worcester with 164 points.

Bentley' Teresa Kittredge came in 10th in the 3,000 meter with a time of 18:49.4. Mary McNaughton (17:38.8) of Holy Cross won the race.

Holy Cross emerged victorious in the competition with 48 points, nine ahead of second place Springfield.

Tiger booters tie Cambridge

NEWTON — In a big game against Cambridge, the host Newton North boys soccer team settled for a frustrating scoreless tie Friday.

Newton North is currently involved in a heated race for the Suburban League championship and a possible shot at the state tournament. The second-place Tigers (4-1-4) are just one point off the pace of first-place Brockton, which beat Quincy on Friday for its 13th league point.

Cambridge pulls to within two points of first while Waltham and Brookline, both idle this past weekend, rest in a tie for fourth place with 10 points.

The Tigers' overall record is 7-2-4. One more win will qualify them for the state tournament.

What made Friday frustrating was the fact that this was North's second strong game. The Tigers were playing some of their best soccer of the season, and by tying Cambridge, came up with only one point for their efforts.

North dominated play with a couple of early chances. Steve Bourland just missed from 20 yards and a scramble in front of the Cambridge goal was nailed hard by attacker Josh Albert from 15 yards. However, Cambridge goalie Jociquin Martin came up big on both accounts.

North had good territorial advantages throughout the game, and the defense kept the pressure on. Fullbacks Simon DeYoung and Matt Selig played well.

Cambridge had its chances, also. The Cantabs had 3 corner kicks in the last minute of the first half, but couldn't put it in. With two minutes left to play, Ed Ramos carried on right wing, passing across to teammate Carlos Nova, who clanked one off the post.

North harriers pound Brookline

BROOKLINE — Newton North soundly defeated Brookline, 19-41, at Brookline's 2.5 mile course Wednesday.

"Our top five finishers all were within 50 seconds of each other and that is a real good sign", said coach Dave Vona. "The team's next meet is against Cambridge who are the best in the state. We are not worried about them specifically this early in the season, we will just take it as it is, just another dual match."

Tuesday, October 7, is when the Tigers meet Cambridge.

Tigers wake from nightmare to shock Crimson Tide, 10-6

By David Cuddy
Staff Writer

EVERETT — For the better part of four quarters, it was another nightmarish game day for Newton North as the Tigers were falling faster and faster towards 0-5.

The only difference Saturday at Memorial Stadium in Everett was that the Tigers woke up before hitting the ground.

Joe Proia's touchdown pass to Joe DeNucci and Mark Adams' ensuing two-point rush with 1:27 remaining ended a month of frustration for Newton North as the Tigers finally had their day, slapping host Everett, 10-6, for their first victory of the season.

"I knew it was going to be hard to do — winning that first game," Newton North head coach Peter Capodilupo said. "I knew it was going to be like walking through cement."

And then, after it was finally accomplished, the coach was happy.

"It's a good feeling. The kids are happy. The coaching staff is happy. Whenever you work hard, winning is the reward, and winning breeds winning. It'll give us a lot of energy."

Any energy the Tigers had gained coming off their best game of the season last week (a one-point loss to Quincy) was wasted for most of Saturday's affair, as Newton North dug itself into a three-quarter rut that could have spelled doom.

Penalties generally negated any ground work the Tiger offense compiled in the first half and, after intermission, Newton North continued to flounder with the ball as Adams fumbled on the Everett five-yard line to kill the Tigers' first real drive of the game.

"We were putting ourselves in the hole with penalties and mistakes," agreed Capodilupo. "Those types of things can cause death at an early age. You can't have people fumbling from five yards out. That was a dark moment, because when you're losing, you don't believe you can win."

But thanks to a physically overmatched but nonetheless aggressive defense — led by ends Josh Field and Neil Hatem and tackle Brian Claflin — the Tigers were always in a position where they could win. Newton North went into the locker room at the half down by a single touchdown, but it would take a jolt of offense to bring the Tigers back up.

That's where Proia stepped in. The once third-string quarterback raised from the dead what was, way back in fall training, to be the new Newton North offense: passing. Up until Saturday, though, the Tigers had done next to nothing with their air attack.

Capodilupo had alternated three quarterbacks, at times using all three in one game, but the passing game was going nowhere fast. That is until Capodilupo inserted Proia into the starting role for the first time this season.

Following three misses in the first half, Proia did Capodilupo proud, completing six of six passes for 80 yards, the last of which tied the score with 1:27 showing.

But the touchdown would have been wasted if Newton North could not capitalize on the extra point. Placekicker Evan Galanis, who doubles as an offensive guard-linebacker, had been on the bench since the first quarter with a neck injury, but the spirited kicker trotted out to give it a go.

At last!

What followed was as confusing to the sparse crowd as it was to the opposing coaches.

"Evan had been hurt, but we warmed him up and we were going to kick," explained Capodilupo. "Everett jumped offside, whether it was intentional or not I don't know. But we lined up to kick again and they called timeout, trying to rattle him (Galanis). At that point, we figured Everett had some kind of a kick block defense planned, so we decided to go for the two points."

Wise choice. Instead of using the frozen Galanis, Capodilupo opted for his ace halfback, and Adams followed an Eddie Lin block into the end zone uncontested.

The Tigers had gambled for new life and won. Even though a good minute remained, Everett was never in a position to retaliate.

Jason DeGeorge pinned the Crimson Tide deep in its own zone with a tremedous kickoff and, following an incomplete pass by Everett quarterback Scott Therrien, two Tiger defenders chased the signal caller into his own end zone and sacked him for a safety.

Dan Cedrone and Neil Hatem did the honors, burying Therrien just behind the goalline to put a nice cap on the victory.

Ironically, Proia's 12-yard flip to a diving DeNucci never really should have happened. Especially for a losing team which had had absolutely no luck in its previous four games.

Proia dropped back on third and long and in came 6-1, 200-pound Rich Lamontagne, looking to rip the quarterback's head clean off. Lamontagne managed to grab hold of Proia's jersey, and it looked as if the 5-5, 150-pound Tiger was going to grab a mouthful of dirt in a hurry.

But, somehow, Proia survived the David vs. Goliath encounter long enough to loft an off-balance toss in DeNucci's direction. All DeNucci did was extend his 5-8 body, pull in the pass on the goalline, and fall into the end zone for an easy six.

"It was an athletic play he made, spinning and throwing the ball," Capodilupo said of Proia. Then on DeNucci, "and it was an exceptional catch."

North girls sparkle in volleyball

NEWTON — Enthused Newton North volleyball coach Jay Cradle call the team play "excellent" as the Tigers turned back Boston Latin, 15-9, 8-15, 15-8, on their home court Wednesday.

By virtue of the victory Newton North lifted its record to 12-2 overall and 10-2 in the Suburban League. The win set the stage for the second-place Tigers' showdown meeting with league leader Quincy on Friday at Quincy.

According to Coach Cradle, "Our general play was excellent. For the first time, they really put the offense together so that there was good set distribution all around and they were using their hitters all over the court."

Sophomore Maria Machado was the vacuum cleaner in the backcourt. She played strong defense, had good serves and was all over the court.

The setting of Wendy Rogers, senior captain, and sophomore sophomore Christine Sullivan was superb.

Newton gridders in home tests

NEWTON — Area high school football teams swing into the last half of the season this weekend with both Newton North and Newton South playing home engagments.

The tigers are coming off their initial win of the campaign, an uphill 10-6 non-league decision over Everett, and will battle an explosive Cambridge, Rindge & Latin eleven at Dickinson Stadium on Saturday.

Newton South, still reeling from the aerial barrage engineered by Wilie Hicks that resulted in a 46-9 Concord-Carlisle romp last week, hopes to get untracked Saturday as it tangles with Bedford at Winkler Field.

Cambridge at Newton North

With a total of 11 returners from last season, including one of the best balanced backfields around, Cambridge, Rindge & Latin is no longer the patsy of the Suburban League.

The Cantabs rebounded from two straight setbacks to open the season and won two in a row before letting one slip away against Waltham this past week.

Newton North is flying high after winning its first game of the season. It wasn't pretty, but it almost never is, as the Tigers combined four quarters of football into about a minute and a half.

Against Cambridge, the Tigers will have the tough task of stopping the versatile Lance Dottin the lightning-quick Waldy Clark. And if that isn't enough, Newton North will have to handle quarterback Dennis Vigilante, who can run the option with the best of them.

Bedford at Newton South

The Lions are in no mood to party after having their helmets spun by Willie Hicks and the Concord-Carlisle Patriots. But then again, neither is Bedford, which was shut out this past Friday by Wayland.

Both clubs will be loaded for bear, trying to rebound from defeat. The Lions have lost four out of five but, more importantly, two in a row. Bedford beat Acton-Boxboro, 30-15, two weeks ago to cap a two-game win streak.

With a healthy backfield, the Lions should get better and better on offense. Leroy Browne, who went down with an injury as soon as T.J. Rhone came back from one, led the squad in rushing this past week with 60 yards. Rhone was not far off, running for 56.

Quarterback Ben Burlingame connected four times for an impressive 92 yards, and if the junior signal caller can beef up his completion rate, Newton South could attack with a well-balanced offense.

Waltham at Brookline

The Hawks continue to pass the test, and any hard-nosed critic would have to give Paul McGovern's boys an 'A' for this past week's performance against Cambridge, Rindge & Latin.

Waltham looked a 14-0 deficit square in the eye and said, "not today, thanks." By the time the first half was over, the Hawks had tied it up. All they needed was one more quarter to pull out the win, and that amazing defense did the rest.

Although Brookline is no Cambridge (a much improved team thanks to a load of returning starters), the Hawks will still have to show up Sunday if they want to keep winning.

After losing to non-league Wellesley in the opener by a touchdown, Brookline rebounded to punch out Quincy, 33-0. It's been downhill from there, though, as the Indians hit the iron and, as a result, the skids.

Brookline lost to Cambridge, 21-17, to start the flow, then got hammered by top-ranked Peabody, 38-6. It didn't get much easier for the Indians last week, as second-ranked Arlington clocked Brookline, 20-7.

Watertown at Burlington

This week might be the right time for Watertown to make up for the scoring opportunities it missed against Melrose. The 1-4 Watertown crew needs a break after losing four straight, and 1-4 Burlington is staring John Barbati and the Red Raiders right in the face.

Burlington, losers of three in a row, is in the same boat as Watertown. Those tough Middlesex League clubs, two of which last week were ranked among the top teams in Division I, are taking no mercy with league foes.

Burlington, like Watertown, got smoked by Woburn and Winchester, both tied with the second highest ranking in the division. With the powerhouses out of the way, it's up to the Raiders and Devils to beat up on each other.

Big cuts necessary to balance books

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city will have to cut about $20 million in anticipated expenses to balance the books over the next five years, officials are predicting.

The shortfall would occur despite an anticipated annual 2 1/2 percent increase in property taxes each year, the maximum allowed by law, according to a recently released five-year forecast.

The crunch starts next year when the city anticipates $123 million in expenses, but only $120 million in revenues, the forecast says. The gap widens to an estimated $8 milllion in fiscal 1992.

Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, stressed the figures are based on conditions as they stand now. He revises the document monthly to account for any changes and already is prepared to alter the estimated five-year, accumulated $20 million deficit.

The forecast, for example, assumes the current 5 percent inflation rate will continue over the next five years. Any fluctuations will change predictions.

Cirillo said projections for 1988 are probably very accurate, while figures for later years are more subject to change.

"The bottom line is it's a realistic forecast, which to layman is grim," he said.

"I'm telling the mayor, the Board of Aldermen and the School Committee that the policy decisions they will have to make will be to increase revenues, reduce expenditures or a combination of both," Cirillo added.

Since Massachusetts state law requires all municipalities to balance their annual budgets, the city will have to chip away at the estimated deficit year by year, he said.

Cuts in the city's services and workforce are one possible option, but not the right one in his view, Cirillo said. Most departmental budgets are in line with those of comparable communities, he said.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann, who released the forecast last week, outlined the pressures currently squeezing fiscal finances.

Cuts in federal money to municipalities, the uncertainties of state aid and a citizen drive to reduce property taxes in 1989 could darken the already gloomy fiscal future, Mann said.

Congress recently killed the Federal Revenue Sharing Program, which granted the city $1 million last year for Police Department employee salaries.

The state last year increased state aid to cover 90 percent of each community's revenue sharing loss, but there is no guarantee the state will be equally generous this year, Mann said.

Despite this one-time generosity, it is the state that is mostly responsible for the city's financial plight, Cirillo said. Because the commonwealth's policy is to give more aid to the so-called needier communities, Newton receives only 10 percent of its revenues from the state. "Look at Boston," Cirillo said. "It gets about 50 percent. Fall River and Chelsea get about 85 percent. That is the problem."

The commonwealth may further jolt Newton's financial picture by not renewing Professional Development Grants the School Committee included in the latest teacher salary raises, Mann said. If that happens, the city will have to bear the cost of those raises.

To withstand the shock of increased budgetary demands, the city has a reserve taxing capacity of $4.7 million. The potential cushion results from not always raising property taxes 2 1/2 percent and underestimating the value of new construction.

"If the state and federal governments continue to reduce local aid, we're going to have to use this taxing capacity," said Mann.

If the Newton Taxpayers Association (NTA) has its way, he will not get a chance to use this tax potential. The NTA hopes to collect enough citizen signatures to force its idea — a $2 1/2 million fiscal 1989 property tax cut — onto the city's 1989 ballot.

Should the association succeed and the voters back the cut, the effect would be something like a double whammy. Instead of the city raising property taxes the annual 2 1/2 percent, it would have to reduce collections by roughly that amount, city officials have said.

Playground dedication

The Newton Parks and Recreation Department recently dedicated the Newton Highlands Playground Baseball Field on Dedham Street in Newton Highlands in honor of Howard Whitmore Jr., former mayor of the city. Extending school day discussed

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writter

NEWTON — Parents pressed a panel of educators last week for their opinions regarding the educational implications of extending the kindergarten school day, but only one panelist — a Newton kindergarten teacher — made her position clear.

"What's most important, that none of us should lose sight of, is that it's critical what happens in the classroom and not necessarily how much time is spent there," according to Karen DeRusha, who was named a Crocker Fellow earlier this year for her innovative teaching techniques. "You're asking for research and answers that we ourselves don't have. Most schools have a traditional half day for kindergarteners and this is a new trend," she said.

There is no conclusive research data indicating the pros and cons of a longer school day for these children and there are "no magical answers," according to Director of Elementary Education Melvin Hines.

Fur, and money, flying in state auditor's race

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Not too long ago, William G. Robinson and A. Joseph DeNucci were good friends, busy trying to win primary nominations in the race for state auditor.

In the past month, however, their friendly relationship has become a casualty of politics and it may remain on the critical list long after Bay State voters elect one of them 18 days from now.

"If there were no party labels involved in this campaign, I would win hands down. It would be a complete mismatch," the Melrose Republican and House minority leader said.

"He should be a novelist because he has no regard for reality and facts," responded the West Newton Democrat and 10th Middlesex District lawmaker.

With few public debates scheduled, both candidates are in the midst of preparing homestretch media blitzes. Robinson's ads are due to begin airing next week, while DeNucci's will begin appearing in the days just before the Nov. 4 election.

Handicapped by a party with a troubled reputation, Robinson spent $90,000 to edge State Rep. Andrew Natsios in the GOP primary and will have thrown another $100,000 at DeNucci when the smoke clears.

That combined amount will not even come close to the kind of money his opponent is investing in the hopes of attaining the $60,000-a-year auditor's post.

For the Democratic primary alone, DeNucci spent $370,000. He plans to shell out close to $200,000 more for the general election.

But, in this race at least, words may do more damage than dollar bills.

"When you begin to review his record, you see a different person emerge. In 1985, he only voted against the House speaker three times," according to Robinson.

"There isn't any way he can function as independent auditor. More than that, he isn't qualified to be state auditor at all. When he was a prizefighter, I was putting together my own business," he added.

Robinson said his experience as a budgetary watchdog and tax-cap champion qualifies him to be the one that make sures the state fulfills its mandate to cities and towns in the face of Proposition 2½.

If the tax-cap referendum authored by Citizens for Limited Taxation is endorsed by the voters, he said, the next state auditor will have greater financial responsibilities, including the return of excess revenues to Bay State taxpayers.

"If anyone is going to vote for the tax cap, they also should vote for someone who enthusiastically supports it — Bill Robinson," Robinson said.

"What I have to do is demonstrate how absolutely unqualified he is. He did a good job as state representative. He did a good job as a doorman and it appears he did a good job as a prizefighter, but this time he should have stayed home and run for re-election," he said.

More 10% housing law controversy

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A new 10 Percent ordinance controversy is being played out by some Ward 7 residents and developer Mel Barkan.

The controversy centers on two units of housing Barkan wants to build on Bartlett Terrace. The houses, if approved by the Board of Aldermen, will serve as compensation to the city's affordable housing stock for the Fairways, a market-rate condominium complex developed by Barkan after he was granted a special permit.

The ordinance was designed to increase the city's pool of affordable housing by requiring developers who ask for a special permit to contribute 10 percent of a project's units or the cash equivalent to the city.

The ordinance allows a developer to build those units off the site of the main development, but stipulates that they comply with the character of the neighborhood.

It is that stipulation, neighbors and area aldermen say, that is cause for concern.

"There is a lot of neighborhood concern regarding the intensity of the proposed development," Ward 7 Alderman Arthur Reilly says. "Also, they are concerned about the excavation."

Because the proposed site sits on a rock ledge, Reilly says neighbors are concerned how Barkan will prepare the site for the buiidings.

Alderman Verne Vance, also from Ward 7, says he wants the board to make sure that Barkan complies with the board order.

"I intend to make sure that the requirements are met by the developer," he says. "I want them to provide information about what they are doing as they do it, not after. I don't want to be in the position of having to act on this after the horse leaves the barn."

James Harper, of 59 Westminster Road, says Barkan's proposal does not suit his neighborhood.

"What bothers me most," he says of the proposed site, which is next to his home, "is that the economic incentives are for Barkan to do the bare minimum."

Harper says Barkan's proposal will not be comparable to the homes in his neighborhood, which he describes as being in the $300,000 range.

"This problem is inherent with off-site contributions," he says. "Anytime a developer is required to come up with an off-site contribution, his primary concern is the site he is developing, not the low-income contribution. Barkan wants to get away with paying as little as possible."

Despite Harper's concerns, Planning Director Barry Canner says Barkan's plans do conform with the neighborhood.

"The board order stipulates that the buildings be Cape-Colonial design, with a detatched garage. These are three-bedroom homes, so they will be compatible to the neighborhood."

Charles Gladstone, a project manager for Barkan construction agrees. "These buildings will fit into the neighborhood," he says.

The only way aldermen could deny the proposal is to deny the granting of an easement that would allow the city to build new sewer and water lines on Bartlett Terrace, which is a private way.

Both Vance and Reilly say it is too early to decide whether to vote against the easement. Aldermen held the easement petition and sent it back to the Public Facilities Committee for more discussion of the proposal's ramifications.

By David Cuddy
Staff Writer

EVERETT — For the better part of four quarters, it was another nightmarish game day for Newton North as the Tigers were falling faster and faster towards 0-5.

The only difference Saturday at Memorial Stadium in Everett was that the Tigers woke up before hitting the ground.

Joe Proia's touchdown pass to Joe DeNucci and Mark Adams' ensuing two-point rush with 1:27 remaining ended a month of frustration for Newton North as the Tigers finally had their day, slapping host Everett, 10-6, for their first victory of the season.

"I knew it was going to be hard to do — winning that first game," Newton North head coach Peter Capodilupo said. "I knew it was going to be like walking through cement."

And then, after it was finally accomplished, the coach was happy.

"It's a good feeling. The kids are happy. The coaching staff is happy. Whenever you work hard, winning is the reward, and winning breeds winning. It'll give us a lot of energy."

Any energy the Tigers had gained coming off their best game of the season last week (a one-point loss to Quincy) was wasted for most of Saturday's affair, as Newton North dug itself into a three-quarter rut that could have spelled doom.

Penalties generally negated any ground work the Tiger offense compiled in the first half and, after intermission, Newton North continued to flounder with the ball as Adams fumbled on the Everett five-yard line to kill the Tigers' first real drive of the game.

"We were putting ourselves in the hole with penalties and mistakes," agreed Capodilupo. "Those types of things can cause death at an early age. You can't have people fumbling from five yards out. That was a dark moment, because when you're losing, you don't believe you can win."

But thanks to a physically overmatched but nonetheless aggressive defense — led by ends Josh Field and Neil Hatem and tackle Brian Claflin — the Tigers were always in a position where they could win. Newton North went into the locker room at the half down by a single touchdown, but it would take a jolt of offense to bring the Tigers back up.

That's where Proia stepped in. The once third-string quarterback raised from the dead what was, way back in fall training, to be the new Newton North offense: passing. Up until Saturday, though, the Tigers had done next to nothing with their air attack.

Capodilupo had alternated three quarterbacks, at times using all three in one game, but the passing game was going nowhere fast. That is until Capodilupo inserted Proia into the starting role for the first time this season.

Following three misses in the first half, Proia did Capodilupo proud, completing six of six passes for 80 yards, the last of which tied the score with 1:27 showing.

But the touchdown would have been wasted if Newton North could not capitalize on the extra point. Placekicker Evan Galanis, who doubles as an offensive guard-linebacker, had been on the bench since the first quarter with a neck injury, but the spirited kicker trotted out to give it a go.

At last!

What followed was as confusing to the sparse crowd as it was to the opposing coaches.

"Evan had been hurt, but we warmed him up and we were going to kick," explained Capodilupo. "Everett jumped offside, whether it was intentional or not I don't know. But we lined up to kick again and they called timeout, trying to rattle him (Galanis). At that point, we figured Everett had some kind of a kick block defense planned, so we decided to go for the two points."

Wise choice. Instead of using the frozen Galanis, Capodilupo opted for his ace halfback, and Adams followed an Eddie Lin block into the end zone uncontested.

The Tigers had gambled for new life and won. Even though a good minute remained, Everett was never in a position to retaliate.

Jason DeGeorge pinned the Crimson Tide deep in its own zone with a tremedous kickoff and, following an incomplete pass by Everett quarterback Scott Therrien, two Tiger defenders chased the signal caller into his own end zone and sacked him for a safety.

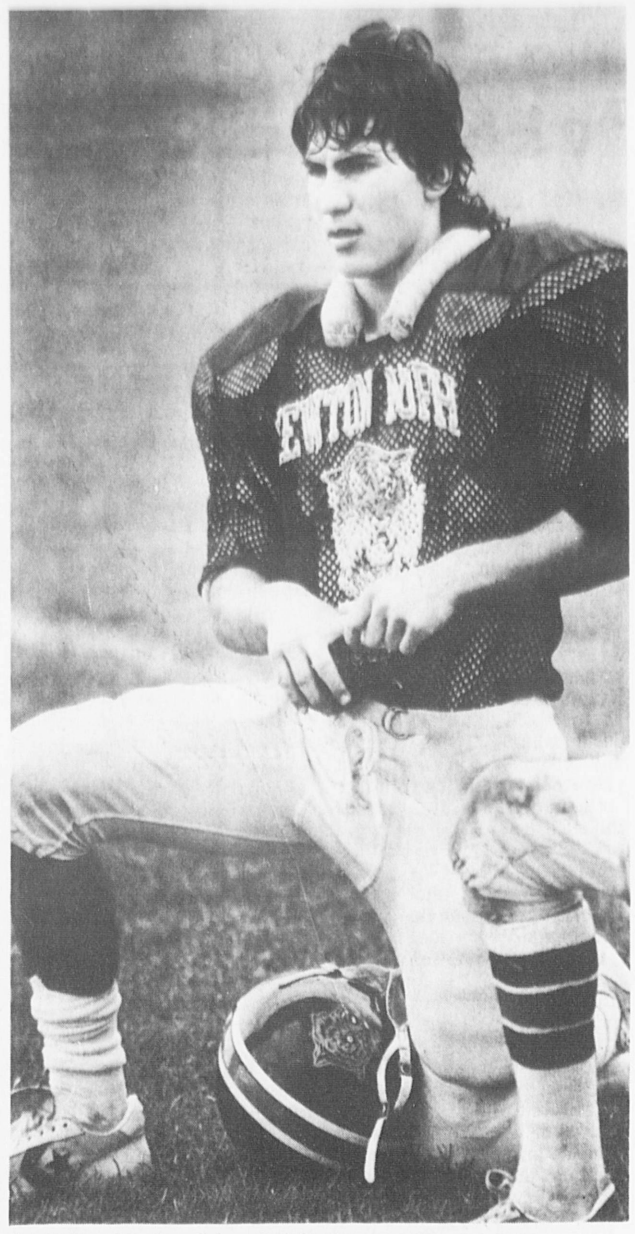
Dan Cedrone and Neil Hatem did the honors, burying Therrien just behind the goalline to put a nice cap on the victory.

Ironically, Proia's 12-yard flip to a diving DeNucci never really should have happened. Especially for a losing team which had had absolutely no luck in its previous four games.

Proia dropped back on third and long and in came 6-1, 200-pound Rich Lamontagne, looking to rip the quarterback's head clean off. Lamontagne managed to grab hold of Proia's jersey, and it looked as if the 5-5, 150-pound Tiger was going to grab a mouthful of dirt in a hurry.

But, somehow, Proia survived the David vs. Goliath encounter long enough to loft an off-balance toss in DeNucci's direction. All DeNucci did was extend his 5-8 body, pull in the pass on the goalline, and fall into the end zone for an easy six.

"It was an athletic play he made, spinning and throwing the ball," Capodilupo said of Proia. Then on DeNucci, "and it was an exceptional catch."



Joe DeNucci made a diving catch for the game-tying touchdown.

North girls sparkle in volleyball

NEWTON — Enthused Newton North volleyball coach Jay Cradle call the team play "excellent" as the Tigers turned back Boston Latin, 15-9, 8-15, 15-8, on their home court Wednesday.

By virtue of the victory Newton North lifted its record to 12-2 overall and 10-2 in the Suburban League. The win set the stage for the second-place Tigers' showdown meeting with league leader Quincy on Friday at Quincy.

According to Coach Cradle, "Our general play was excellent. For the first time, they really put the offense together so that there was good set distribution all around and they were using their hitters all over the court."

Sophomore Maria Machado was the vacuum cleaner in the backcourt. She played strong defense, had good serves and was all over the court.

Receiving their championship jackets are the 1986 South East Mass. 12-year-old champions, wearing Newton East uniforms. However, many of the players were recruited after the Williamsport Tournament to make the team more competitive facing other two teams that had only one representative. For the season, Newton East was 18-6, but went 11-2 in area competition. Front row, from left, Stephen Lafer, Bobby Zuker, Billy Walsh, Robert Farina, Nick Cartier. Newton gridders in home tests

NEWTON — Area high school football teams swing into the last half of the season this weekend with both Newton North and Newton South playing home engagments.

The tigers are coming off their initial win of the campaign, an uphill 10-6 non-league decision over Everett, and will battle an explosive Cambridge, Rindge & Latin eleven at Dickinson Stadium on Saturday.

Newton South, still reeling from the aerial barrage engineered by Wilie Hicks that resulted in a 46-9 Concord-Carlisle romp last week, hopes to get untracked Saturday as it tangles with Bedford at Winkler Field.

Cambridge at Newton North

With a total of 11 returners from last season, including one of the best balanced backfields around, Cambridge, Rindge & Latin is no longer the patsy of the Suburban League.

The Cantabs rebounded from two straight setbacks to open the season and won two in a row before letting one slip away against Waltham this past week.

Newton North is flying high after winning its first game of the season. It wasn't pretty, but it almost never is, as the Tigers combined four quarters of football into about a minute and a half.

Against Cambridge, the Tigers will have the tough task of stopping the versatile Lance Dottin the lightning-quick Waldy Clark. And if that isn't enough, Newton North will have to handle quarterback Dennis Vigilante, who can run the option with the best of them.

Bedford at Newton South

The Lions are in no mood to party after having their helmets spun by Willie Hicks and the Concord-Carlisle Patriots. But then again, neither is Bedford, which was shut out this past Friday by Wayland.

Both clubs will be loaded for bear, trying to rebound from defeat. The Lions have lost four out of five but, more importantly, two in a row. Bedford beat Acton-Boxboro, 30-15, two weeks ago to cap a two-game win streak.

With a healthy backfield, the Lions should get better and better on offense. Leroy Browne, who went down with an injury as soon as T.J. Rhone came back from one, led the squad in rushing this past week with 60 yards. Rhone was not far off, running for 56.

Quarterback Ben Burlingame connected four times for an impressive 92 yards, and if the junior signal caller can beef up his completion rate, Newton South could attack with a well-balanced offense.

Waltham at Brookline

The Hawks continue to pass the test, and any hard-nosed critic would have to give Paul McGovern's boys an 'A' for this past week's performance against Cambridge, Rindge & Latin.

Waltham looked a 14-0 deficit square in the eye and said, "not today, thanks." By the time the first half was over, the Hawks had tied it up. All they needed was one more quarter to pull out the win, and that amazing defense did the rest.

Although Brookline is no Cambridge (a much improved team thanks to a load of returning starters), the Hawks will still have to show up Sunday if they want to keep winning.

After losing to non-league Wellesley in the opener by a touchdown, Brookline rebounded to punch out Quincy, 33-0. It's been downhill from there, though, as the Indians hit the iron and, as a result, the skids.

Brookline lost to Cambridge, 21-17, to start the flow, then got hammered by top-ranked Peabody, 38-6. It didn't get much easier for the Indians last week, as second-ranked Arlington clocked Brookline, 20-7.

Watertown at Burlington

This week might be the right time for Watertown to make up for the scoring opportunities it missed against Melrose. The 1-4 Watertown crew needs a break after losing four straight, and 1-4 Burlington is staring John Barbati and the Red Raiders right in the face.

Burlington, losers of three in a row, is in the same boat as Watertown. Those tough Middlesex League clubs, two of which last week were ranked among the top teams in Division I, are taking no mercy with league foes.

Burlington, like Watertown, got smoked by Woburn and Winchester, both tied with the second highest ranking in the division. With the powerhouses out of the way, it's up to the Raiders and Devils to beat up on each other.

Big cuts necessary to balance books

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city will have to cut about $20 million in anticipated expenses to balance the books over the next five years, officials are predicting.

The shortfall would occur despite an anticipated annual 2 1/2 percent increase in property taxes each year, the maximum allowed by law, according to a recently released five-year forecast.

The crunch starts next year when the city anticipates $123 million in expenses, but only $120 million in revenues, the forecast says. The gap widens to an estimated $8 milllion in fiscal 1992.

Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, stressed the figures are based on conditions as they stand now. He revises the document monthly to account for any changes and already is prepared to alter the estimated five-year, accumulated $20 million deficit.

The forecast, for example, assumes the current 5 percent inflation rate will continue over the next five years. Any fluctuations will change predictions.

Cirillo said projections for 1988 are probably very accurate, while figures for later years are more subject to change.

"The bottom line is it's a realistic forecast, which to layman is grim," he said.

"I'm telling the mayor, the Board of Aldermen and the School Committee that the policy decisions they will have to make will be to increase revenues, reduce expenditures or a combination of both," Cirillo added.

Since Massachusetts state law requires all municipalities to balance their annual budgets, the city will have to chip away at the estimated deficit year by year, he said.

Cuts in the city's services and workforce are one possible option, but not the right one in his view, Cirillo said. Most departmental budgets are in line with those of comparable communities, he said.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann, who released the forecast last week, outlined the pressures currently squeezing fiscal finances.

Cuts in federal money to municipalities, the uncertainties of state aid and a citizen drive to reduce property taxes in 1989 could darken the already gloomy fiscal future, Mann said.

Congress recently killed the Federal Revenue Sharing Program, which granted the city $1 million last year for Police Department employee salaries.

The state last year increased state aid to cover 90 percent of each community's revenue sharing loss, but there is no guarantee the state will be equally generous this year, Mann said.

Despite this one-time generosity, it is the state that is mostly responsible for the city's financial plight, Cirillo said. Because the commonwealth's policy is to give more aid to the so-called needier communities, Newton receives only 10 percent of its revenues from the state. "Look at Boston," Cirillo said. "It gets about 50 percent. Fall River and Chelsea get about 85 percent. That is the problem."

The commonwealth may further jolt Newton's financial picture by not renewing Professional Development Grants the School Committee included in the latest teacher salary raises, Mann said. If that happens, the city will have to bear the cost of those raises.

To withstand the shock of increased budgetary demands, the city has a reserve taxing capacity of $4.7 million. The potential cushion results from not always raising property taxes 2 1/2 percent and underestimating the value of new construction.

"If the state and federal governments continue to reduce local aid, we're going to have to use this taxing capacity," said Mann.

If the Newton Taxpayers Association (NTA) has its way, he will not get a chance to use this tax potential. The NTA hopes to collect enough citizen signatures to force its idea — a $2 1/2 million fiscal 1989 property tax cut — onto the city's 1989 ballot.

Should the association succeed and the voters back the cut, the effect would be something like a double whammy. Instead of the city raising property taxes the annual 2 1/2 percent, it would have to reduce collections by roughly that amount, city officials have said.

Playground dedication

Extending school day discussed

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writter

NEWTON — Parents pressed a panel of educators last week for their opinions regarding the educational implications of extending the kindergarten school day, but only one panelist — a Newton kindergarten teacher — made her position clear.

"What's most important, that none of us should lose sight of, is that it's critical what happens in the classroom and not necessarily how much time is spent there," according to Karen DeRusha, who was named a Crocker Fellow earlier this year for her innovative teaching techniques. "You're asking for research and answers that we ourselves don't have. Most schools have a traditional half day for kindergarteners and this is a new trend," she said.

There is no conclusive research data indicating the pros and cons of a longer school day for these children and there are "no magical answers," according to Director of Elementary Education Melvin Hines.

Fur, and money, flying in state auditor's race

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Not too long ago, William G. Robinson and A. Joseph DeNucci were good friends, busy trying to win primary nominations in the race for state auditor.

In the past month, however, their friendly relationship has become a casualty of politics and it may remain on the critical list long after Bay State voters elect one of them 18 days from now.

"If there were no party labels involved in this campaign, I would win hands down. It would be a complete mismatch," the Melrose Republican and House minority leader said.

"He should be a novelist because he has no regard for reality and facts," responded the West Newton Democrat and 10th Middlesex District lawmaker.

With few public debates scheduled, both candidates are in the midst of preparing homestretch media blitzes. Robinson's ads are due to begin airing next week, while DeNucci's will begin appearing in the days just before the Nov. 4 election.

Handicapped by a party with a troubled reputation, Robinson spent $90,000 to edge State Rep. Andrew Natsios in the GOP primary and will have thrown another $100,000 at DeNucci when the smoke clears.

That combined amount will not even come close to the kind of money his opponent is investing in the hopes of attaining the $60,000-a-year auditor's post.

For the Democratic primary alone, DeNucci spent $370,000. He plans to shell out close to $200,000 more for the general election.

But, in this race at least, words may do more damage than dollar bills.

"When you begin to review his record, you see a different person emerge. In 1985, he only voted against the House speaker three times," according to Robinson.

"There isn't any way he can function as independent auditor. More than that, he isn't qualified to be state auditor at all. When he was a prizefighter, I was putting together my own business," he added.

Robinson said his experience as a budgetary watchdog and tax-cap champion qualifies him to be the one that make sures the state fulfills its mandate to cities and towns in the face of Proposition 2½.

If the tax-cap referendum authored by Citizens for Limited Taxation is endorsed by the voters, he said, the next state auditor will have greater financial responsibilities, including the return of excess revenues to Bay State taxpayers.

"If anyone is going to vote for the tax cap, they also should vote for someone who enthusiastically supports it — Bill Robinson," Robinson said.

Despite the state's relatively large Democratic majority, Robinson believes he can beat DeNucci.

"What I have to do is demonstrate how absolutely unqualified he is. He did a good job as state representative. He did a good job as a doorman and it appears he did a good job as a prizefighter, but this time he should have stayed home and run for re-election," he said.

More 10% housing law controversy

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A new 10 Percent ordinance controversy is being played out by some Ward 7 residents and developer Mel Barkan.

The controversy centers on two units of housing Barkan wants to build on Bartlett Terrace. The houses, if approved by the Board of Aldermen, will serve as compensation to the city's affordable housing stock for the Fairways, a market-rate condominium complex developed by Barkan after he was granted a special permit.

The ordinance was designed to increase the city's pool of affordable housing by requiring developers who ask for a special permit to contribute 10 percent of a project's units or the cash equivalent to the city.

The ordinance allows a developer to build those units off the site of the main development, but stipulates that they comply with the character of the neighborhood.

It is that stipulation, neighbors and area aldermen say, that is cause for concern.

"There is a lot of neighborhood concern regarding the intensity of the proposed development," Ward 7 Alderman Arthur Reilly says. "Also, they are concerned about the excavation."

Because the proposed site sits on a rock ledge, Reilly says neighbors are concerned how Barkan will prepare the site for the buiidings.

Alderman Verne Vance, also from Ward 7, says he wants the board to make sure that Barkan complies with the board order.

"I intend to make sure that the requirements are met by the developer," he says. "I want them to provide information about what they are doing as they do it, not after. I don't want to be in the position of having to act on this after the horse leaves the barn."

James Harper, of 59 Westminster Road, says Barkan's proposal does not suit his neighborhood.

"What bothers me most," he says of the proposed site, which is next to his home, "is that the economic incentives are for Barkan to do the bare minimum."

Harper says Barkan's proposal will not be comparable to the homes in his neighborhood, which he describes as being in the $300,000 range.

"This problem is inherent with off-site contributions," he says. "Anytime a developer is required to come up with an off-site contribution, his primary concern is the site he is developing, not the low-income contribution. Barkan wants to get away with paying as little as possible."

Despite Harper's concerns, Planning Director Barry Canner says Barkan's plans do conform with the neighborhood.

"The board order stipulates that the buildings be Cape-Colonial design, with a detatched garage. These are three-bedroom homes, so they will be compatible to the neighborhood."

Charles Gladstone, a project manager for Barkan construction agrees. "These buildings will fit into the neighborhood," he says.

The only way aldermen could deny the proposal is to deny the granting of an easement that would allow the city to build new sewer and water lines on Bartlett Terrace, which is a private way.

Both Vance and Reilly say it is too early to decide whether to vote against the easement. Aldermen held the easement petition and sent it back to the Public Facilities Committee for more discussion of the proposal's ramifications.

'Nunsense' is habit forming

By Candy Kosow
Correspondent

BOSTON — Did you hear the one about the group of nuns who died when they ate a bad batch of soup, and so that they might receive proper burials the remaining nuns decided to stage a fundraiser?

Nonsense, you say? Nunsense, says anyone who's been to the Boston Shakespeare Theatre and had the chance to visit with the Little Sisters of Boston.

"Nunsense" is the award-winning show that spoofs life in a convent. The show features five nuns, who are participating in a talent show so they can come up with the money to bury the four as-yet unburied sisters. This foursome has been placed ever so quietly in the convent's freezer. (Mother Superior did have enough money to bury all the nuns, but opted to buy a Betamax instead.)

The nuns at the Little Sisters of Hoboken went to their untimely ends as the victims of botulism from vichyssoise, cooked up by the convent chef, Sister Julia. The mere mention of Sister Julia's name, forces the other nuns to cross themselves and utter, "Child of God."

The nuns singing and dancing up a storm in the Mount St. Helenes school auditorium include Sister Mary Amnesia (Laurie Graff), a dim-witted sister who can't remember who she is or why she's in a convent. She has a penchant for using off-color language, but has no idea where she learned the words.

Sister Mary Amnesia is joined by Sister Mary Leo (Kathryn Coeb of East Boston), a novice played with just the right amount of innocence and humor.

Sister Robert Anne (Lori Glaser of Arlington) is arguably the funniest of all. She's the one who's not afraid to show people there's more to being a nun than just wearing a habit. By twisting and turning the material, Sister Robert Anne becomes Attila the Hun, Convent Miranda, Sister Pippi Longstocking, to mention but a few. Although she's not the greatest stage presence at the convent, Sister Robert Anne is delighted that the nuns are putting on a show because she loves the spotlight.

Sister Mary Hubert (Bonnie Schorn) is the second-in-command at the convent. Should anything happen to the Mother Superior, Sister Mary Hubert has made no bones of the fact that she would be next in line to succeed her — a thought never far from her mind. Shorn has the best voice in the cast and really gets to strut her stuff on the show's two best numbers: "Just a Coupl'a Sisters," and "Holier than Thou."

The Grand Dame in this piece is none other than the Mother Superior, Sister Mary Regina (Mary-Pat Green). Green's characterization is the most natural in the cast, perfectly believable as the orderly but bumbling Mother Superior.

The show moves from song to song and thought to thought with ease. The problems plaguing this group offers a diversion from life's traumas. I wouldn't say the script and songs are particularly sacred, but they are whimsical and entertaining.

Lillie unveils recent creation

Lillie, a professor of sculpture at Boston University's School for the Arts, received the commission to do the statue of the Wellesley College teacher, poet and world traveler in August 1984 from the Trustees of the Falmouth Public Library and completed the 18-inch model in April 1985. It shows Bates at 34, her left hand resting on a rock, as she may have looked on a visit to Pike's Peak, Colorado. "It was then and there," Bates wrote, "as I was looking out over the sea-like expanse of fertile country, spreading so far away under those ample skies, that the opening lines of the hymn floated into my mind."

In Lillie's original model for the six-foot statue, a fluttering piece of paper is clutched in the right hand. But after seeing last season's Huntington Theatre production of "On the Verge," a play about three Victorian women propelled into the future, he was inspired to substitute a period hat.

"The costumes were so marvelous that I started to think that my sculpture was almost too plain. I wanted it to be very straightforward, dignified, monolithic, without too many frills. But I changed my mind after seeing the costumes in that play of the same period," he said.

The statue dedicated in Falmouth is actually the form from which the final statue is being cast. "The hat's going to be a little smaller," he said in August. "The statue down there (in Falmouth), I made it in fiberglass, and I think it (the hat) got a little big. So when I do it in bronze, it's going to be just a little smaller. It's funny how you change your mind as you go along."

Lillie said that reading a biography of Bates by her niece helped in developing the image. "The sculpture is not that literal, other than I did get a likeness. She was rather short and on the heavy side, but the sculpture is over six feet. The whole idea was to portray an image of what she was about. I tried to pick a pose that was not formal but dignified. She was a writer, artist, poet and professor at Wellesley College. And I tried to get some of these qualities across," he said.

The dedication, held on Bates' birth date, was part of Falmouth's Tricentennial celebration. The College Light Opera Company, from the Falmouth Highfield Theatre, sang "America The Beautiful" during the ceremonies, which also featured readings of letters and greetings from President Ronald Reagan, Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry, and Representative Gerry Studds.

Lillie has been at Boston University since 1961. His other commissions include the bronze statue of former Boston Mayor James Michael Curly and the bronze bust of Boston Celtics president Red Auerbach, both on view near Faneuil Hall in Boston.

Your Home

You pay for quality

By The Associated Press

At most home centers, you can buy a 24-inch, one-drawer base kitchen cabinet for about $60.

At a custom kitchen dealer's, the price to fill that same 24-inch space in your kitchen might be $600.

Why the dramatic price difference? Because when buying expensive cabinets, you pay for distinguishable quality differences that withstand the test of time, according to Better Homes and Gardens "Kitchen and Bath Ideas" magazine.

The magazine article by Patrick J. Galvin says there are seven basic criteria for price differences: materials, construction, joinery, finishing, hardware, interior fittings, and adaptability.

Materials — Cabinets are made from several woods. Birch is the least expensive. Add eight percent for oak, 40 percent for mahogany.

Construction — It's possible that inexpensive cabinets will come without backs or a floor in the sink cabinet. When installed, the kitchen walls and floor double as the cabinetry backs and floor.

Joinery — Stock cabinets are usually assembled with glue and staples. More expensive cabinets feature dovetailed or lock-miter joints.

Finishing — Inexpensive cabinetry is often finished by printing a wood-grain pattern on to plain particleboard or plywood. The finishing process for more expensive cabinets involves a dozen or more steps with hand rubbing after each.

Hardware — Drawer slides range from simple nylon-bearing surfaces to expensive full-extension three-piece steel with ball bearings engineered to hold 100 pounds or more. Door hinges can be simple, or six-way adjustable. Knobs and pulls may be brass, wood, ceramic, or synthetic materials.

Interior fittings — These re the many accessories that add convenience to a kitchen, according to "Kitchen and Bath Ideas." That includes rotary shelves in corner cabinets (add $110); pullout shelves in base cabinets (add $60); pullout snack tables (add $400), and fold-out pantry compartments for base, above-counter, or floor-to-ceiling cabinets (add $130 to $900).

Adaptability — You can adapt kitchen cabinets to other rooms by ordering special sizes and decorative moldings. Elements include pullout and turntable hardware for a television set or stereo. Furniture units such as desks and dining tables also are available.

Now it's designer rugs

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Americans, it has been said, love being associated with celebrities so much that they will happily wear the inititals of some big name or other on ties, handbags and luggage, among other items.

Preferring the designs of the well-known is also said to be responsible for merchandise such as designer sheets, designer perfume and even designer chocolates. Now the phenomenon has appeared in a new product category: area rugs.

Whether coincidentally or not, two collections of rugs created by famous folks recently debuted in New YOrk.

One, introduced by Carpet Fashions, a retailer in Manhattan, features nine rugs by, among others, celebrity columnist and jet set chronicler Aileen Mehle (Suzy) and Soho celebrity Diane Brill as well as clothing designers Koos van den Akker, Michaele Vollbracht and Oscar de la Renta.

The other group of 18 area rugs, imported by the Danish rug manufacturer, Ege, was produced from designs by 12 major Danish artists. The Ege rugs are being distributed across the country in furniture and carpet outlets. To introduce "Art Line" to the American market which he expects to take about 70 percent of production, Lau Aabling, president of Ege, and Per Arnoldi, the graphic artist who created three of the designs, recently embarked on a six-week 21-city tour throughout the United States.

The impetus for both the Ege and Carpet Fashion collections came out of a desire to do something different to capture public attention, according to principals of both firms.

"For the past few years, I have seen the entire industry being safe and dull in brown and beige. I decided that we had to do something completely different by going to people with no previous experience of rugs. So we started looking for artists, sculptors, painters, graphic designers," explained Aabling.

Though at first suspicious of the offer to translate their work into rugs, eventually 12 Danish artists of international reputation agreed to participate, including sculptor Robert Jacobsen and painter Arne L. Hansen.

The resulting area rugs, all woven Axminsters of wool, come in three sizes: 4 feet 7 inches by 6 feet 7 inches, 6 feet by 9 feet and 8 feet 2 inches by 11 feet. Pricing is described as moderate, similar to other wool rugs of the same type.

To emphasize the art connection, Ege has also produced framed graphic prints of each artist's original design which consumers can buy "so that the art on their walls matches the art on their floors," according to Walter Moomjy, of Einstein-Moomjy, a rug retailer carrying the line in the New York area.

In addition, everyone who buys an Ege art rug will also receive a catalogue which pictures them all and has a biography of each artist-designer.

Fernando Matteo, owner of Carpet Fashions, has taken a different tack. His collection of nine designs is frankly expensive, and the creators of the rug designs were chosen for their celebrity status as well as talent. The least costly of the area rugs is $3,400 and all are available in wall-to-wall and custom colors at even higher prices.

The retailer's public relations man, Yvon C. Dihe, helped find the designers and said that "the only turndown was Ivana Trump (wife of New York builder Donald Trump)."

According to Mitchell Horowitz, general manager of the store, the genesis for the collection occurred at a restaurant when he admired a waiter's shirt, learned it was designed by the Dutch-born Koos van den Akker and decided something like the shirt would make an attractive area rug.

When asked to create a rug, van den Akker says he readily agreed. The carpet retailer decided to see if others might find the project enticing. Nine did, including the designer Antonio and interior designers Robert Denning and Vincent Fourcade as well as architects Peter Moore and Peter Pennoyer.

Are area rugs designed by artists and celebrities a mere fad? Carpet retailer Moomjy says he doesn't think so since "the American market is looking for something different, especially in an affordable price range."

Some may wonder whether celebrity floors will lead to celebrity walls, furniture and accessories. The answer appears to be yes, since artists, designers and celebrity names seem increasingly to be turning up on a variety of home furnishings. Recently for example, a large furniture firm began marketing a collection created by interior designer Jay Spectre. Then a fabric and wallpaper firm introduced a line of wallcoverings endorsed by Ladybird Johnson.

Decorative arts, it seems clear, are a bridge between the rarified world of fine art and the mundane world of mass-produced culture.

How to humidify your home quietly

In the winter, the air in your home may lack sufficient moisture, and that can cause your nose and throat to become dry or parched, and your lips to become chapped. A humidifier can ease some of those problems — and the latest ultrasonic models do it very quietly.

Ultrasonic humidifiers are typically about the size of a bread box and relatively lightweight. The 18 popular ultrasonics recently tested by Consumer Reports' engineers can effectively humidify one or two large rooms — though not an entire house. They range in price from about $70 to $140, but are generally discounted.

A major difference between the ultrasonic humidifiers and more traditional models is in the way they make mist: Traditional models use a mechanical impeller or drum to turn water to mist; ultrasonics use vibrations.

A small, dime-sized nebulizer oscillates at about 1.7 million times per second, churning up the water into a very fine, cool mist. The vibrations are so fast they can't be heard. All of the models tested were whisper quiet.

In addition, tests by Consumer Reports' engineers showed that ultrasonic humidifiers don't spray out live molds along with the fine mist, like traditional cool-mist vaporizers do. The ultrasonic vibrations apparently kill molds, and most bacteria, which can grow in the humidifiers' water-storage reservoirs. These micro-organisms are also killed by the heat of steam vaporizers, but they can remain alive and be dispersed by traditional cool-mist models.

Of the models tested, the Toshiba KA508DE1, $110, was top-rated. It offered the best combination of performance and convenience. The Toshiba had the highest output, so it could humidify the largest area — or humidify a single room the fastest. Its vapor distribution was excellent. Poor vapor distribution can ruin the finish on your floor or tabletop, or soak the carpet.

If you use tap water in a humidifier, white dust from the minerals in the water may be deposited on furniture and other surfaces. The problem is especially severe if you have hard water.

The Sunbeam 661, $98, Sun-Mark 665, $80, and Welbilt MW30, $80, can accept the Sunbeam's optional water demineralization filter, model 6515-100, which virtually eliminated the white-dust problem. The Bionaire BT200, $130, comes equipped with a demineralization filter, which also proved effective in reducing white dust.

The engineers caution that if your house lacks a vapor barrier inside the exterior walls, be wary of using any humidifier. A vapor barrier, such as plastic sheeting or foil on the warm side of the wall keeps heated, moist indoor air from coming in contact with cold surfaces inside the wall and causing condensation. Such condensation can make insulation less effective and can lead to swollen, rotting wood and peeling exterior paint. (Houses most likely to lack a vapor barrier are those built decades ago.) (c) 1985, Consumers Union. (C)1985, Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

What's hot in cooktops?

By Better Homes & Gardens
A Meredith magazine

A built-in cooktop transforms a central counter or island into a snazzy custom cooking center.

Remodelers prize the drop-in cooktop because it lets you put your day-to-day cooking center in one place and the oven in another. Many cooktops are down-venting, so you can install them without a range hood overhead.

Your most basic decision is power source: gas or electricity. Gas units offer high efficiency and the ability to adjust heat instantly; electric models tempt you with an intriguing array of heat elements.

Conventional electric cooktops offer traditional coil burners that heat by electric resistance. They get hot quickly and accommodate almost any cookware.

Solid-element cooktops feature cast-iron disks, sealed to the cooktop, for gradual electric heating without hot spots. Flat-bottom pans are required for good heat transfer, and you must season the disks with cooking oil periodically to avoid rust.

Glass ceramic cooktops conceal the heating elements beneath a sleek surface; you must use flat-bottom pans and clean the cooktop after each use so spills won't burn and adhere to the surface.

Magnetic induction cooktops offer a smooth cooking surface and a revolutionary cooking technology. Their hidden coils generate a magnetic field that produces heat in the pan, but not in the cooktop itself. Prime benefits: you can control heat instantly, and the cooktop never gets really hot. However, you must use magnetic pans (steel and iron, or any pan that attracts a household magnet), and the units cost four to five times as much as coil cooktops.

You can have cake and eat it, too: Both gas and electric units offer interchangeable grills, griddles and rotisseries, as well as wooden covers you can use for cutting boards. For electric cooktops, there are also fryers, cast-iron disks, induction burners and canning and wok elements.

American made products improve

By Better Homes and Gardens

American goods competing against imports for the trust of U.S. consumers have pulled even with foreign products on issues of quality, and where a product is made could be a deciding factor on which product to buy, according to a Better Homes and Gardens survey.

There is less certainty, however, on issues of competitive price. U.S. consumers believe that American products are too expensive, therefore pricing domestic products out of the market.

Still, it's apparent that American shoppers are increasingly aware of what is U.S.-made and what isn't. Consumer confidence in American-made products is at the point where 84 percent of respondents believe the quality of U.S. goods is equal to that of imports, and if two products are similar in quality and price, 74 percent of shoppers will check to see which is U.S.-made. More than half of respondents in the Consumer Panel survey also report they routinely shop for American-made products.

That's welcome news for U.S. manufacturers who emphasize product quality in the battle for American marketplace supremacy. Margaret Daly, money management, automotive and features editor of the magazine, said, "The concentration on quality is paying off for many U.S. manufacturers. It's very likely a battle they'll have to keep fighting. Foreign businesses aren't going to ease up on the quality of their goods either."

Tempering the enthusiasm, however, is consumer belief that while the quality of U.S. goods has improved, prices of American goods are too high. More than 75 percent of respondents say American manufacturers have priced themselves out of the market.

U.S. consumers would support moves to make American products more attractive in foreign markets while protecting U.S. interests at home. More than 60 percent favor a system in which American good compete with foreign goods without limitation. Another 68 percent favor import limits to help American products on the domestic scene.

The survey was conducted among 500 members of the Better Homes and Gardens Consumer Panel. The panel is drawn on a random basis from the magazine subscriber rolls.

The ultimate game of musical chairs

By David Jacobson
Hartford Courant

U.S. households with pianos: 14.2 million. New pianos sold domestically in 1985: about 150,000. Households moving in a year: almost 1 out of 6.

It's the piano-moving blues, a concerto for cranes and winches, a sonata for specially heated trucks, a song for strong backs and nimble toes.

On the roll

Hundreds of thousands of pianos are on the roll every year — spinets, consoles, uprights, baby and parlor grands — America's favorite musical instruments following their mobile owners like unwieldy, grossly overweight pets, their lacquered sides heaved up flights of stairs into attic apartments, their cast-iron inner frames towed to tenement tops, their guts of copper-wrapped steel wires and felt-covered hardwood hammers relocated to raised-ranch rec rooms.

Heavier than a refrigerator, less pliable than a couch, unable to leap even the lowest curbing in a single bound, a piano is both a source of pride and the stuff of nightmares for homeowners and movers alike.

"It's the hardest thing we handle, for sure, without a doubt," says Mark Milkie, manager of Admiral Moving and Storage in South Windsor.

as well have dropped it in the Atlantic. It (rain) ruined the hammers. It ruined everything."

Share cost

With such keystone keyboards in mind, it was no wonder that Suzanne Alix of Meriden couldn't bear to watch her dream — a $1,600 Wurlitzer spinet — raised by a crane into her third-story apartment on a recent weekday morning. She went to work instead.

"All I can think of is those Laurel and Hardy movies where the furniture is dangling outside the house for a couple of days and they can't figure out how to get it in there," she said.

Although she hasn't taken lessons since high school, Alix, 37, recently got an itch to tickle the ivories again. She wanted her new piano even though it couldn't make the stairwell turns in her triple-decker home.

"If it takes a crane to get it in there, I'm going to take it," she said then.

(In her case, the piano store had promised delivery and was footing the $160 rental bill for the crane. Some stores ask buyers to share some of the costs of an "abnormal" haul, movers said.)

As it turned out, there was little cause for worry. With the crane's major assist, three movers from North End Express had the small, 500-pound piano off the driveway surface and set up in her living room in minutes.

Alix's brother, Jim, videotaped the smooth move for posterity.

Alix's persistence is hardly rare among piano buyers and relocating owners, movers say.

Chauvin has torn down walls, added underpinning supports to stairways or removed steps altogether to squeeze big, heavy pianos into yearning musicians' homes and lives.

Brown has moved pianos through doorways and up stairs with only a half-inch vertical clearance. But he recalls one job where a ceiling joist simply extended 3 inches too far. The piano's owner fetched a power saw and cut out the needed space.

"I'm glad he did," Brown says. "Years after that we had to take the piano back out."

Ward off chills

Piano moving specialists say they have superior expertise and delicacy when it comes to hauling instruments. Chauvin, for example, says he has a fleet of heated trucks for winter moves to ward off "traumatic" chills.

But general movers with decades of experience handling pianos with household loads say they do just as good a job.

(A random survey of several local movers found charges ranging from $50 to $75 an hour, depending on the size of the piano and thus the size of the truck and number of men required. Most general movers did not charge more for handling a piano than they did for a regular load of household items, though one surveyed did.)

One point that movers can agree on is that the first obstacle to installing a piano is often an owner's misguided optimism.

"They say, 'You can come right in,'" Chauvin says. "And you can come right in with a sack of groceries. But not with a piano, because you can't turn and you have to come in backwards and there's a whole flight of stairs.

"People don't mean to be misleading but they really are," he says. "They don't want to tell us that it's going to be this kind of move because they want us to get the piano over there. What they don't understand is we don't mind doing a second floor, we just have to be psychologically prepared for it."

Wrong measure

Brown says some people misread household geometry for piano moving purposes.

For example, home owners often measure the vertical clearance on stairs to ceiling joists up-and-down.

They should be checking it at a 45-degree angle to account for the way in which a piano length will be carried, he says.

Likewise, a stairwell as wide as the piano is not wide enough. "You still need room for a man to stand there and pick it up to make the corner," Brown says.

Need strong back

Ultimately, the piano is hard to move because it's at least twice the weight of a baby elephant and about as bulky. Carrying one up a flight of stairs requires more mind-over than muscle-over matter, movers say.

Weight lifters don't necessarily make the grade, says Chauvin, even though he's a former lifting champion himself: "All their weight training has been carefully designed to keep their feet in place. They don't know how to walk with a piano at all."

On the one hand, a strong back is needed, he says: "If you can picture a 950-pound piano starting up a flight of stairs: One man has to stand on a step two steps above and now he has to bend and reach down for the piano and ... pull that sucker up — that's a nightmare of lifting."

But proper teamwork and psychology are even more vital, Chauvin insists, citing a quarter-century of moving pianos — across bumpy lawns and wintry ice, onto stages and boats, and upstairs, including, once, a 9-foot concert grand up four flights to a Manhattan recital hall in a building with a broken elevator.

"You have to be psychologically prepared to lift it," he says. "You have to work in an absolutely flawless cadence to do the moves that are boggling. You work as a precision team like a bobsled or a rowing team ... 'Lift on five, ready?' You start getting handholds, psyching up, adrenalin pumping. 'Five, lift!' And everybody lifts, and that sucker moves. It moves because everybody lifted at exactly the same time."

"Who's ever in charge ... has to set interim goals," he notes. "'OK, guys, I want to get this to that landing and then we'll stop and rest. We're going to make it at all costs. And when we get there we're going to rest for a minute, then we're going to turn this sucker and rest for about 30 minutes.'

"You do that because the weight of the piano can be very, very demoralizing," he says. "We go through a mental exercise, because the piano is really too heavy for any sensible person to lift it."

Because of the ardent psychological and careful teamwork involved, Chauvin says, a piano owner's aid will yield only discord.

"There are certain strains on your body that are so severe that if you weren't ready for that you'll drop it," he says. "When he (an owner/helper) reaches that pain level, he'll let go and he'll create absolute chaos and a very dangerous situation."

Chauvin's three sons were "raised and weaned on piano lifting" and now work alongside him. Their father gives credit to God for the physical feats.

"Moving a piano is a symphony of many things," he says. With their groaning efforts, the movers "make our own little dissonant harmony."

Common plants can be fatal poisons

By David Hendin

More than 700 types of plants in the northern hemisphere have caused illness or loss of life. Experts are also sure that many plants that have not yet been identified as poisonous really are.

The percentage of poisonous plants is not very high, but many are so beautiful, and so well known, that it is hard to believe they can be lethal. Poisonous plants can easily be found in your garden and foundation plantings as well as in vacant lots and woods. The U.S. Public Health Service reports that thousands of children eat potentially poisonous plants every year.

Train children not to chew on anything other than known foods, no matter how familiar it appears to be. Keep a close watch on the little ones in the hand-to-mouth stage.

Often, one part of a plant is not only edible, but nutritious, while another part can kill. Twigs of cherry trees release deadly cyanide when eaten. The leaves of peach trees contain hydrocyanic acid. The leaves and vines of fresh tomatoes and potatoes contain poisons that can cause severe stomach upsets and nervous disorders.

Rhubarb is possibly the most dangerous plant in your vegetable garden. Its stalks are safe and delicious, but the leaves contain oxalic acid, which turns to crystals when it reaches the kidneys and causes severe damage.

Jimson weed, sometimes called thorn apple or stinkweed, is poisonous, and grows almost everywhere. It is responsible for more poisonings than any other plant. Its large, white, funnel-type flowers resemble morning glories. The plant has large leaves and grows from 2 to 5 feet tall. All parts are poisonous.

The beautiful, flowering oleander bush contains a deadly heart stimulant so powerful that a single leaf can kill. A number of people have died just from eating steaks that were speared with oleander sticks and roasted over a fire. If you do use sticks to cook upon or with, be sure they are safe.

Do you have hyacinths, narcissus or daffodils around the house? Poisons from their bulbs cause nausea, vomiting and diarrhea, and may be fatal.

Rhododendron, azalea, daphne and wisteria have leaves, stems and berries that can kill your child.

Larkspur, lily of the valley, iris, pea, autumn crocus and bleeding heart are a few more familiar plants that have poisonous flowers, stems, leaves, seeds, roots, berries or bulbs. There is enough poison in a tiny packet of castor beans to kill half a dozen youngsters. One rosary pea seed can kill a child.

Beautiful holiday greens and plants are nice to have around, but mistletoe, holly, Jerusalem cherry and poinsettia can all cause serious cases of poisoning.

Socrates was put to death by being forced to drink a brew made from poison hemlock, a common plant that resembles the wild carrot. Yews, common garden evergreens, are a type of hemlock. Other hedge plants, such as the box, privet, and hydrangea, are all dangerous if leaf clippings or small plants are eaten.

As for wild mushrooms, the best rule is to leave them to the experts. Most of them — no matter how much they look like the kind of mushrooms you buy in the store — are poisonous.

In his book, "Deadly Harvest," Dr. John Kingsbury gives this advice: Learn the poisonous plants in your neighborhood. Impress upon children never to eat any unknown garden or wild plant, herb, shrub, or tree. Never make medical preparations from them.

In any case of poisoning or suspected poisoning, call your physician, and be prepared, if at all possible, to tell him the name of the plant involved. Save evidence that might help identify the plant.

If plant poisoning is suspected, you may treat the child as if he had ingested any other poison where induced vomiting is called for. (C)1986, Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Tougher furniture standards cut fire deaths

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The country's fire departments are called to an average of 1,700 home fires every day. Those fires kill a dozen people, and while that toll is declining it still remains one of the highest in the industrialized world.

Tougher standards for mattresses and upholstered furniture have helped cut fire deaths, but careless installation and use of wood stoves still poses a serious danger, safety officials report.

And the U.S. Fire Administration says some new problems may be emerging: a rising toll in blazes in boarding houses and an increase in fires caused by small children playing with disposable cigarette lighters.

Some 4,240 Americans died in 623,000 residential fires in 1984, according to figures compiled by the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

That is down from 757,500 home fires and 5,500 deaths reported in 1980, but it still remains higher than many other nations, reports James F. Hoebel, manager of the commission's Fire and Thermal Burn Hazards Office.

Among industrialized nations, only Scotland and Canada have higher fire death rates than the United States, according to Fire Administration studies.

Here's the good news: Regulations requiring more fire resistant mattresses and furniture, which went into effect in the 1970s, are starting to have an effect. And more and more Americans are installing smoke detectors.

But there is also bad news, as fires associated with wood-burning heaters remain high despite efforts to educate people about proper use and installation of the devices.

The safety commission statistics — compiled jointly with the Fire Administration and the National Fire Protection Association — showed 70,600 fires and 950 deaths in 1979 involving mattresses or bedding. By 1984 that had declined to 46,700 fires and 720 deaths, as old matresses were replaced by safer models. The same trend occurred in fires involving upholstered furniture.

There were 6.8 deaths per 1,000 fires in American homes in 1984, down from 7.3 in 1980.

Magic furniture for children

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith magazine

When Los Angeles architect Gary Gilbar couldn't find any stylish furniture for his two small children, he decided it was high time design reached the little people, says Better Homes and Gardens Decorating magazine.

Relying on images that came naturally to him, he designed a collection of furniture that can transform a child's bedroom into a small city (or a giant fantasyland, depending on the perspective).

Called Fun Furniture, the series features Greek Revival storage units, a palm tree corner shelf, and a star headboard. Also included are prototypes of architectural greats, including an Eiffel Tower closet and a bulletin board in the shape of Los Angeles' neoclassic city hall.

The furniture is as practical as it is fun. Available in colors ranging from lavender to bright red, the pieces are coated with crayon-proof plastic laminate. Each object in the collection is a showcase in and of itself, designed to spark children's imaginations while serving their needs.

And, unlike racing-car beds or dressers stamped with ducks, the sophisticated images Gilbar has created aren't quickly outgrown. "This furniture grows with the child," says partner Marcia Herman. "In some ways, it is really ageless. I just sold some pieces to a 32-year-old advertising executive for his office."

Echoes of Holocaust mark his canvases

By Joyce Leffler Eldridge

BROOKLINE — His canvases reverberate with the hope that survives release from two concentration camps.

His art reflects the flamboyant color of Kandinsky, the whimsical precision of Miro and Klee, and the "Jewish emotionalism" of Chagall and Soutine.

His aim is to set up a dialogue between the viewer and the canvas so that each engages and energizes the other.

His name is Albert Alcalay and his new exhibit at Hebrew College in Brookline opens Sunday, Nov. 9, unveiling a series of paintings — entitled "Memories" — never before shown. Alcalay will give a talk at 3 p.m. that day on "The Growth of An Artist," courtesy of the College's Abraham and Etta Goodman Art Program.

The "Memories" series harkens back to Alcalay's youth in Eastern Europe and Italy, spent initially in Belgrade's School of Architecture and next as an officer in the Yugoslav Army during World War II.

Captured as a prisoner of war but entered as a Jew in a Bulgarian concentration camp, Alcalay decided to throw himself on the mercy of a Nazi commanding officer after he was tortured and nearly blinded by bright lights.

"I'm a young Jew, an architect, a painter with a girlfriend at home, and much that I still want to do with my life," he recalls himself saying.

Stunned by Alcalay's frankness and ingenuousness, the Nazi officer agreed to release him by providing him with false doctor's papers (doctors at that time were released on their own recognizance, so to speak). Alcalay returned to Belgrade where he was promptly rounded up with other Jews who were shot systematically, every fifth one receiving a bullet.

As the fourth Jew in his particular quintet, "I said to myself, 'Get yourself out of here, Albert. Don't play with G-d's fingers too much.'"

Using passport-forging skills acquired working for Aliyah Bet, Alcalay passed himself off as an Italian, Alberto Alcalla. After being detected by Italian authorities, he tried to get himself imprisoned in a rural Italian jail in order to elude the Nazis.

But "it's not so simple" to be jailed in Italy, he discovered. After confessing the crime of entering without documents, Alcalay was told by the jailkeeper: "Come back tomorrow." His humorous anecdotal recollections of wartime experiences in Italy are always tempered by profuse gratitude for the numerous kindnesses (saving his life being one o them) that Italians extended t him and other Jews.

Italian concentration camps were initially set up more "t save Jews from Hitler than to tor ture them," Alcalay explained.

Ironically, it was during his internment in a southern Italy concentration camp that he took up the serious study of painting under the tutelage of German Expressionist Michael Fingesten, "who was my first encounter with the spirit of a real artist," Alcalay recalls. "He infused in me the joy of painting and was extremely crucial in my development."

Alcalay's life within the camp and, afterwards, in the "free confinement" town of Pergola, Italy, were without any untoward incidents. However, once Mussolini was captured by the Germans, among other concessions he agreed to cooperate in "turning over" the Jews in exchange for his own freedom. Shortly thereafter a telegram arrived in Pergola asking authorities to ship the Alcalay family directly to Dachau.

Fortunately, a sympathetic telegraph operator showed the telegraph to Albert before transmitting it to Fascist authorities. Albert, his father, mother and sister escaped into the hills of Italy, where compassionate peasants hid them for three years.

His last close brush with death came only two days before his false passport arrived, courtesy of the Vatican. Alcalay was barricaded into a small fireplace opening, thanks to a kind Italian with considerable experience in eluding thorough German searches.

Although such images and memories no doubt shaped his art, Alcalay refrained from addressing the subject directly until "a necessary historic distance" gave him some aesthetic objectivity.

Currently working on a book to pay homage to the Italians who befriended him, Alcalay has returned to Italy twice in recent years to track down his former "blood brothers" and flesh out the poignant "Memories."

"I virtually lived these memories one more time while I was there," Alcalay recalled during a recent interview at his spacious three-story Brookline home, where each room serves as a gallery for his oils, gouaches, sculptures, rice drawings and the like.

Drawings and paintings of Holocaust reminiscences by noted artist Albert Alcala of Brookline will be unveiled at Hebrew College starting Nov. 9. Alcalay himself will talk on "The Growth of an Artist" at 3 p.m.

"Thank G-d for the Italian peasants and Catholic priests who were hiding us," Alcalay says simply.

A Zionist from his youth, Alcalay had planned ultimately to settle in Israel, but his increasingly strong artistic leanings forced him to rethink his long-range ambitions.

"I leaned more and more to America since I couldn't see returning to a barracks-style life, as would be the case on a kibbutz. Besides, my mind wasn't on pastures or cows!"

Ultimately he settled on Boston ("the image of the 'Athens of America' appealed to me," he conceded) rather than New York City ("a haven for artists but too many cockroaches for my tastes.")

On the first day he set foot on American soil, he spent his entire $200: "my first time ever in a supermarket," also a costly art book on Breughel, and an AM/FM radio.

Although Bostonians initially dismissed his canvases as "too European," a couple of prominent art critics, including a key writer on The Christian Science Monitor, recognized the impact of his work and sent his reputation soaring. His financial future also improved considerably in 1954 after the DeCordova Museum in Lincoln, Mass., showed his art, whereupon several patrons requested individual art lessons. "In six months I had a waitng list of 40 people," he recalled.

What he really hoped for, however, was an academic position at one of the leading universities or art schools. Initially none was offered. Then, in 1959, he was among 10 artists from across the country who were given Guggenheim grants, out of 5,100 applicants. With that newfound clout, Alcalay had a choice of numerous offers, ultimately affiliating himself with Harvard University's Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts, where he remained on the faculty until 1983.

What critics frequently find puzzling about Alcalay's work — which until now had not addressed the persecution of Jews — is how an artist with such a brutal, sometimes gruesome past can summon up such a brilliant, buoyant palette.

Asked that question at his Brookline studio, where he has painted for the past 25 years, Alcalay answers easily:

"I have a very positive attitude toward life. I think it's a gift. It's not what life does for me, but, rather, what I do for life! I feel it's essential to improve (myself) every day and be positive.

"Life is very meaningful. It's important not to waste a single hour."

Besides the pen and ink drawings that capture memories of the Holocaust, Alcalay has also used oils to depict the macabre nature of the Nazi soul. Deliberately evoking yet distorting Matisse's "The Dance," his painting of women dancers uses Matisse's color and theme, but transforms Matisse's lush green into a "putrid" pallor reeking of the acrid smells of concentration camps. Instead of Matisse's sinuous curvilinear forms, Alcalay's dancers are frozen in a chain-like trance, with no energy or fluidity propelling them.

In all his works, a common Alcalay hallmark is to co-mingle the familiar and the unfamiliar until images meld together, creating a new reality that heretofore had not existed.

"A painting should properly set up a dialogue between the work and the viewer," Alcalay patiently explains.

Pro-choice rally set for Saturday

NEWTON — Over 100 Newton residents will gather on Saturday, Oct. 25 for a rally in opposition to Question One on the November ballot which is a proposed anti-abortion amendment to our state's constitution. Featured speaker will be Lois Pines, Democratic candidate for the state senate seat from Newton. The rally will be held at Cabot Park in Newtonville starting at 11 a.m. The public is invited to attend.

Following the rally volunteers will spread out all over Newton delivering pro-choice literature to every household and encouraging residents to vote No on Question One.

The rally is sponsored by the Newton Area Planning Team for the Campaign for Choice which is a coalition of over 60 organizations in the state that oppose Question One. These organizations include Planned Parenthood, League of Women Voters, Massachusetts NOW, American Civil Liberties Union, Mass Choice, American Jewish Congress, and Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and United Church of Christ groups.

"This amendment gives the legislature sole power to prohibit or regulate abortion to whatever extent the federal law allows," stated Priscilla Leith, social issues coordinator for Massachusetts NOW and a member of the Campaign for Choice steering committee. "The amendment will allow the legislature to cut off or regulate public or private funding (insurance). It will also allow the legislature to regulate or prohibit abortion services and facilities."

For additional information about the rally or the pro-choice campaign in Newton, call 964-1747 or 969-6794.

Women's conference slated at Boston College

CHESTNUT HILL — The Boston College Alumni Association's Women's Resource Committee presents "Horizons: A Conference for Women," a day of panels and networking on everything from climbing the corporate ladder to launching a business, Saturday, Oct. 25, at Barry Pavilion on the university's Newton Campus.

Open to all interested women, the conference costs $45, including lunch.

Joan Helpern, president and chief executive officer of Joan and David shoes of New York, kicks off the women's gathering — the first of its kind ever at BC — with a keynote address at 9:20 a.m.

A wide variety of women — from teachers, lawyers and artists to nurse practitioners, FBI agents, TV news reporters, and owners of tennis shops and ad agencies — will discuss panel topics ranging from entrepreneurial risk-taking, making it in the public sector, and moving up the corporate ladder, to making the most of nursing and teaching skills and succeeding in communications and the arts.

Almost all the panelists are alumnae of BC or Newton College.

"This is the very first women's conference at BC of this scale or magnitude," says Carol Barry, who earned a 1981 MBA from BC and is on the planning committee of the Women's Resource Committee.

She hopes it will give women a chance to "meet other women and be exposed to new ideas in their professions. It's a place for networking and support. If you're a housewife who wants to start a business, you can meet other women who've done it."

Helpern, herself a former Lexington teacher who launched her shoe company in New York in 1969, now generates $61 million in sales annually, with 318 employees and stores in Boston, and Florence, Italy.

Last April, her stores were ranked 30th of the top woman-owned businesses in the U.S. by "Savvy" Magazine.

The conference is a "way of bringing together and integrating all the women of BC, past and present, from Newton College and all BC's graduate and undergraduate programs," says Helen Maslocka, a 1979 BC graduate, who organized the event.

Groups, such as the Women's Statewide Legislative Network, New England Women Business Owners and the U.S. Department of Labor/ Women's Bureau, will also present exhibits on careers and how to start businesses.

In addition, the BC art department will show "Alumni Artists, 1976-86" throughout the day. Many are women.

The conference is open to all interested women.

THE SINGLES ADVISOR

RAYMOND J. CABOT, LCSW

Attempts to help friend may be waste of everyone's time

The Singles Advisor
By Raymond J. Cabot, LCSW

Dear Ray,

My own social life seems to be going pretty well. I've started an intimate relationship with a man who is intelligent, charming, sensitve, a marvelous lover and he has a lot of other positive qualities.

When my husband and I split up two years ago, I didn't know that finding a compatible man was supposed to be a problem for middle-aged women. I just tried many ways of meeting people, read a number of books about "singlehood" issues and concerns and eventually met this special man.

My problem is one of my girlfriends. Lisa and I have been friends since our college days. She went through a divorce five years ago and still hasn't met someone with whom she can form a relationship. She states that this is what she really wants, but that it hasn't happened for her as yet.

Lisa is quite attractive, intelligent, shapely, has a good career and she is an interesting and sincere person. However it seems that no matter what I suggest as a way of meeting men she rejects it. For example, when I suggest singles groups she says that the people in these groups are losers. When I suggest singles dances she says that all the men just stand around. When I suggest dating services she says that they are too expensive and don't provide results. When I suggest personal ads shw says that they don't work. I would really like to help Lisa, by I don't know what else I can do and I feel like I have let her down.

N.C., Needham

Dear N.C.,

An axiom that I coined recently is "Virtue is its own punishment." How often in doing a good deed or trying to help someone else do we find our virtuous action backfiring?

What you have done is to exercise control over you own social life. Apparently you made it a priority to learn, practice and to take positive actions to find what you wanted. People can usually understand these concepts when it comes to career goals or education or other parts of their lives. However, when it comes to one's social life, people often find it easier to just complain that to apply reasonable approaches to solving a problem.

Lisa may really believe that she wants to find someone, but this may be merely an intellectual form of denial. For five years she has been saying that there is no suitable way of meeting men, and I'm sure saying that there were no suitable men for her as well. From her perspective, she is correct. No way and no man will be acceptable to her. This period of five years has been preceded by perhaps many years of a poor relationship with the man she was married to before divorcing. It should not be too surprising to anyone that the projection of a negative attitude and negative belief system to the singles world will result in a self-fulfilling prophecy. She will continue to experience only negative reinforcement.

She might learn from your experience, but it appears that she has chosen to ignore and deny what you have done. You can continue to frustrate yourself by trying to help someone who emotionally rejects your help or you can recognize what is happening and get on with your own life. You can continue to be her friend and to be close, but you might want to discontinue giving advice. When she asks for help you might simply suggest that she try what you have done and leave it at that.

Do you have a question about dating and relating and learning to function as a single adult? Send it to: The Singles Advisor, c/o Transcript Newspapers, Box 69, Waltham, MA 02254.

Are you divorced or divorcing? The booklet, "Divorce and After: Learning to Function as a Single Adult?" is available for $4. Make check payable to: Relationships Agency, P.O. Box 434, Lincoln, MA 01773. Allow three to four weeks for delivery.

It's hard to know just when opportunity will knock. It may come when we least expect it or are least prepared for it. That comes under the category of chance.

If you're in business, you know full well that you can't run a successful business on chance or happenstance. Your responsibility as a business manager is to make things happen...when you want them to...in adequate numbers...and from the consumers who can and will buy your product or service.

That's called promotion. And, when you couple proper promotion with in-depth market knowledge you are on the road to successful sales action.

This is where Transcript Newspapers knowledgeable advertising representatives can lend a helping hand. We are experts in market knowledge and advertising promotions. Coupled with our professional art department we can help you create an advertising message that will be read, remembered and acted on. That's what will make your sales register ring.

Give Transcript Newspapers a call today...and ask to speak to one of our professional advertising representatives. We'll make your business life easier and happier.

Murder trial delayed

By David Weber
Staff Writer

Martin Bowler of Watertown, charged with the murder of an Auburndale man last October, has been given another reprieve because of difficulty in assigning a judge to the case.

The trial was re-scheduled once to begin last week, exactly one year after the murder of 24-year-old Richard Farnese. It originally was slated to start Sept. 4, but was delayed after Bowler twice slashed his wrists in August while in Middlesex County Jail.

Asst. District Attorney George Murphy, the lead prosecutor in the case, said the trial has been pushed back to an undetermined date in November. He said a problem in getting a judge assigned to the case was the reason for delay.

The case now has been assigned to Superior Court Judge Robert Prince, who is scheduled to hear another murder case beginning Nov. 3. The Bowler trial likely will be heard after that case, said Murphy.

"I'm ready to go to trial right now," said Murphy. "I'm as anxious as anyone to go to trial."

The equivalent of a photographic S.W.A.T. team from the Newton Police Department showed up in the mayor's office last week to record the promotion of three of their fellow police officers. The focus of the ceremony was on Capt. John J. O'Brien, Lt. Francis A. MacKenzie and Sgt. John J. Bartinelli, Jr., all of whom were cited by Mayor Theodore D. Mann and Chief William F. Quinn for their service to the community.

Mann offers olive branch to aldermen

'Open door' policy revived

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Attempting to improve communications between his office and the Board of Aldermen, Mayor Theodore D. Mann has reaffirmed his "open door policy."

In a letter to aldermen, Mann recently reminded them that, since he became mayor in 1972, his office has been open at any time so they can discuss issues, raise questions or seek information.

The letter also says he is setting aside time during evenings this week and in early December so aldermen can meet with him.

Aldermen often get bogged down at meetings in debate over questions that could be easily answered by him or city department heads, the mayor said at his weekly press conference.

"Very few aldermen have availed themselves — but some have — of the opportunity of calling me and meeting with me," Mann said.

Instead of "flailing at branches, we should be getting at the roots of problems," Mann said.

The mayor's letter mentions past attempts by him to open up lines of communication with the board. It notes that several years ago, he established the Budget Advisory Committee, including board and School Committee members.

"More recently, I have invited the president, vice president and committee chairmen of the Board to my office to discuss our legislative workload," he said.

The mayor's communication drive comes in the wake of aldermanic charges his administration has failed to keep the board informed on key issues.

Angry Alderman George Mansfield, chairman of the Public Facilities Committee, criticized the city weeks ago for failing to answer questions about plans to fix Newton North High School roofs.

When the city in August held a bid opening for the Crafts Street maintenance garage project before aldermen approved the funds, Alderman Richard McGrath accused the city of arrogantly usurping the Board's powers. McGrath said the city did not even tell him that the bids were being opened.

> 'If nobody takes advantage of it, I'll try another way. I'm going to continue to communicate.'

> Mayor Mann

Mann at his press conference said the invitation to aldermen represents a "new spirit of cooperation," adding that his new policy amounted to offering an "olive branch" to the legislative branch of city government.

"If nobody takes advantage of it, I'll try another way," he said. "I'm going to continue to communicate."

Several years ago, the mayor experimented with keeping City Hall open one night a week so citizens could come by and discuss issues and problems. "Not many ... few ... none chose to take advantage of it," he said.

The mayor says he is seeking to reach the public through the aldermen. "We elect our representatives to run the city's business," he said.

Forced retirement assessed

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Former Public Safety Officer Charles Feeley tells the story of an elderly acquaintance who craved retirement so he could golf every day.

But the man — who used to sneak away from his business one morning each week for 18 holes — soon found he could not sustain himself on golf alone.

"Now he just plays cards and wonders what else he's going to do," said Feeley, who is 67.

Feely himself had no trouble adjusting to retirement two years ago, he said. It was a process of shifting energy from his lifelong vocation — police work — to several avocations.

He began writing a column for a local newspaper and hosting a radio program for local station WNTN. He assumed the chairmanship of the City's Council on Aging. And he continued attending monthly meetings of the Massachusetts Safety Officers League and the Massachusetts Juvenile Officers Association.

"It took me about 20 minutes to get used to it," he said of retirement.

As the experience of Feeley and his friend shows, each person approaching retirement faces two doors.

Behind one is the time for well-earned leisure and productive pursuits.

Lurking beyond the other are years of loneliness and depression — years during which one no longer feels a part of the world.

Social pressures, personality traits, family situation and even sex are among the factors which generally determine the door a retiree will open.

Leo Curry, head of the city's Fire and Wire Department, recently brought the issue of mandatory retirement to public attention with his fight to hang onto his job. State law forced the city to retire Curry, who turned 65 on Oct. 2, while many city officials protested that the mandatory retirement law was inappropriate in his case.

Most interviewed said mandatory retirement regulations have no justification except for positions requiring physical strength and the dexterity of youth.

One, however, said some system of retirement is Liability issue delays 4—town drug task force

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

County officials hope to unravel technical problems so four area communities can form a regional anti-drug task force by the end of the year.

The task force, which would combat the sale of narcotics on the streets, would include Watertown, Waltham, Newton and Weston.

Peter Bella, Middlesex County assistant district attorney, said the county is now grappling with the issue of liability — that is, whether the host or the sending community would be responsible should an incident lead to a lawsuit.

Local police chiefs had been hoping that County Sheriff John McGonigle would deputize task force officers so they could follow the trail of drug investigations throughout Middlesex County.

"The issue of liability is causing the problem in forming the task force and in getting Sheriff McGonigle to deputize" the officers, Bella said. "I would hope by the end of this year all the problems will be worked out."

If formed, it would permit designated police from each community to assist each other in conducting drug investigations and making arrests. Since pushers often recognize officers in their community, the regional task force could help crack cases, law enforcement officials have said.

Newton's drug investigation unit has received over 400 tips since it was formed six months ago, said Sgt. Arthur Fryar, head of the squad. The area task force would create a network so the four police departments police could share those tips and information, he said.

Forming the task force would be "probably the most progressive bit of action" local law enforcement agencies could take to combat illegal drug sales, he said.

The drive for regional cooperation against drugs does not mean the four communities have a greater drug problem than other areas, Fryar said.

But drug pushers do not respect the boundaries of any city or town, he said. Most of the narcotics police find in Newton come from outside the region. Officers have to be able to follow a

Progress for city's day care providers

A dream realized

By Dawn M. DiMartino

WEST NEWTON — A wooden street sign puzzle is still wrapped in plastic displaying a $5.99 pricetag. Red, blue, yellow, and green plastic shoe boxes hiding blocks, paints and toy dinosaurs line the four-foot shelves. Ready, set, go.

On Nov. 3, 1986 the Helen Cooper Evans Child Care Center (HCECCC) in the cellar of the Myrtle Baptist Church on Curve Street in Newton will rip the plastic off of the puzzles, take down the treasure chest of shoe boxes and open its doors to the community.

"The center will provide a loving environment for children of all races, creeds and colors," Reverend Howard Haywood, chairman of the board of directors for the Center, said at the open house last week. Haywood then offered the scissors to Mayor Theodore Mann for the official ribbon cutting. Other town officials, including Alderman Matthew Jefferson, attended the ceremony.

Day care study funded

NEWTON — The newly formed Child Care Commission will hire a consultant to assess the day care needs in the city with a planning grant it received recently from the state.

The $8,250 grant will now allow the commission to proceed with its plans to study the day care crunch and alleviate long waiting lists parents now face for child care.

The 20-member city commission — including representatives from the School Department, recreation, health, existing day care providers and other city departments — applied for the grant in July.

"We were getting a little nervous for a while because we didn't hear from the state for several months," said Sally Rizzo, commission a quality profesional preschool education and child care experience.

Evans, for whom the center was named, was a life-time resident of Myrtle Baptist community, which was once known as "the village." "The church was the social and political center of the community," said Haywood. "And, she was a real pioneer. She was the first to get involved in the Newton Community Center. She was a volunteer at the Head Start Program, and the Presbyterian Church at Newton Corner. She believed that the church should respond to the needs of its community."

In December, 1984, the child care center was proposed to the entire Myrtle Baptist congregation for a vote. It was widely supported and was the easiest step, said Haywood. The most difficult problem was finding a director/teacher.

"There's a shortage of childcare professionals, we're a new center and unestablished," said Haywood. "We must have interviewed at least 30 applicants from June of 1985 until we found one in June of 1986. We didn't reject anyone, but many applicants were afraid because it was a new center. We had patience and faith; we knew they'd come."

Patience and faith came in the form of Janice Lane. In her seafoam green dress, Lane floated around the Center during the opening ceremonies greeting the curious community.

Although Lane is a 26-year-old, unmarried and childless, the new director/teacher said she does not foresee problems in dealing with parents. "It's all a matter of how you project yourself. If you project yourself professionally it's easier," she said. "Also, I think my education from Wheelock College, and my experience at Children's Village in Cambridge will certainly help. I admit I don't know all the answers; but, if I don't have them, I find them."

Lane, who is white, does not seem apprehensive about working for the predominately black community. "They made me feel welcome from the very beginning."

Eyeing a little girl in lilac overalls who was busy in the housekeeping area — complete with a child's sink, feather dusters, mops and brooms — Lane said, "I'm so excited to finally see children playing over there."

The other seven or eight children were either playing with bristle blocks, squeezing a cuddly tiger puppet that squeaked, or rolling on the psychedelic rug bearing shapes, numbers and letters.

Unfortunately, the center will not have as many children enrolled on Nov. 3 as were present at its opening. There will be only two. Yet neither Haywood nor Lane is worried.

"There's a real need," said Lane. "Many children are on waiting lists and are being turned away at other day care centers. Once we open, and people start to spread the word, we'll see enrollment increase."

Tuition is $90.00 per week. The children will bring lunch, and a morning and noontime snack is provided by the HCECCC. When the children arrive, they engage in quiet activities such as reading or coloring. Later they choose an art activity, a large motor skills activity — such as playing with cars or building blocks — or a small motor skills activity — such as constructing with Leggos.

Cleanup is next, followed by story-telling, music or movement group activity. Outdoor play is planned, weather permitting. And a nap is scheduled after lunch. Afternoon activites follow the same format as the morning schedule.

The HCECCC is licensed by the Newton Board of Health and the license hangs on the wall in Lane's office. She said she wants to frame it because a lot of work went into obtaining it.

Newton is one of the few cities and towns which can license its own day care facilities," explained Haywood. "The Newton Board of Health came and inspected the building. We had to install an elaborate fire detection system and child-height hand railings. We were lead paint free but had to plug-up the electrical sockets. Some of the things are little, but they're only little until something happens to a child and they become monumental," he said.

"In addition, we needed a health program, an accident procedure, insurance, a parent handbook ... and we had to fill out all kinds of forms," he said as he pinched an inch of air between his thumb and forefinger to show how many forms.

Myrtle Baptist Church is now planning the construction of an addition to the back of the church. "It will allow HCECCC's room to always be used for child care," explained Haywood. "Now we have to break it down on Friday night for our church activities on Saturday and Sunday."

"If my mother was here now she'd be beside herself," said Martha Cruise, daughter of Helen Cooper Evans . "This was her dream."

Sox fans are furious ... fatigued

Bitten again, she's very bitter

COMMENTARY
By Sarah Droney McGurrin

You got sucked in again didn't ya?

I know I did. I promised myself. I promised my husband. I even promised my mother that I wouldn't. But I did. I got caught up in it all only to be burned again.

That's what hurts the most. That and the nauseating fact that the Red Sox lost to a New York team. What could be worse than losing to any team from that rotten city? Who wants to fall to a city nicknamed after a fruit?

The Big Apple indeed.

And so for the fourth time in 19 years my precious heart is broken. Shattered. Tossed carelessly into the corner near the bloody TV to rot for another winter.

I lept from the Sox bandwagon in 1978, swearing up and down Yawkey Way that I would never get on again. I basked in the warmth and security of the Celtics. I was very happy, content and safe.

So what happened? Like a schmuck, I fell for the oldest line in the world. Hendu's miracle in Anaheim converted me. I was a believer again.

Bitter? You bet your Fenway Frank I'm bitter. I've had it.

It was heady stuff. But it's sure sour now. Listening to those rowdy rival and proud-to-be-obnoxious fans singing "We will, we will rock you" makes my stomach turn.

Only a game? Who are you kidding?

If the Sox had taken home all the marbles before — even once in 68 years — it wouldn't be so bad. But to have this dreaded Curse hanging like a cloud over the region ....

It's too much to bear.

The New England psyche has been deeply shaken this week. And don't feed me any of that, "well at least they got there" stuff. It doesn't apply when talking of a seven-decade drought. It doesn't soothe the scarred soul.

The point is they lost the big one again. Yes, we can use that word: They choked. In fact they did it twice just to get the point across. They lost the World Series twice. Just in case you missed it Saturday in Game 6 the Olde Towne Team brought home another devastating version live and in color on Monday.

When the Pats became Patsies in the Super Bowl it wasn't this bad. Gutsy or not, the Pats were out of it from the opening kickoff. They never had a World Championship firmly in hand — only to leave their fans gaping incredulously as it somehow slipped away yet another time.

Bitter? You bet your Fenway frank I'm bitter. I've had it. Why would intelligent people let themselves believe in this team. It doesn't matter that they had the best hitter in baseball or that Rocket Roger was the 8th wonder of the summertime sporting world.

The Curse cannot be quashed. It is older than most of us. Stronger. And heaven knows more powerful.

The Curse will live and the Red Sox will lose. But I swear to you I won't be watching.

The Celts raise the flag Friday.

Along with Boggs, he is bleeding and bleary-eyed

COMMENTARY
By Andrew P. McCloy

Wade Boggs sat in the dugout looking through misty eyes to the revelry and elation on the field. It was over. The ups, the downs, the work.

Boggs' tears flowed for the collective heart of New England, a region somehow united by the work of two dozen men. The loss goes far beyond the confines of Shea Stadium. It filtered its way north into every baseball-watching soul.

The Red Sox have lost. The Possible Dream becomes impossible. The season of a lifetime has passed.

The Red Sox' climb toward the top meant more than winning baseball games. A camaraderie spread over the region. Strangers became fellow fans. People connected. Even when words weren't exchanged, you could see it in the eyes. It became a conspiracy, a reason to band together.

Neophyte fans became instant baseball experts. Old time Sox fans rekindled their hopes. Fenway Faith was restored.

Two dozen men, with ashen clubs and rawhide gloves for tools, helped an entire region transcend the drudgery of everyday life. Talk of the Olde Towne Team became more important than complaints about traffic jams or bad days at the office.

The Other Three — the Celtics, Patriots, and Bruins — were temporarily placed on the shelf. The Red Sox were in the World Series. The Red Sox in the World Series?

City council meetings were postponed. Night classes were let out early. Time to watch the Series became a part of daily schedules.

For those who had to work — like the firemen, policemen and hospital workers — games were followed by a radio call into the station or a glance at the TV for a score update.

Baseball suddenly became everybody's business. Thousands fell in love with the sport overnight, intrigued by the excitement and uncertainty that the game offers.

The Red Sox proved to New Englanders that baseball is the only American sport that grown men play for money. Baseball is a microcosm of the American Dream. The toil and sweat of a lifetime squeezed into nine innings.

Miles of videotape and stacks of newspapers cannot describe the glory the 1986 Red Sox instilled in hearts of New Englanders.

But the dream has slipped away. Gone. Kaput. No more chances. Saved for the history books and storytellers. And we New Englanders share the mourning along with the players.

For Boggs, Rice, Evans, the loss meant more than an end to a 175-game season. The loss shattered the hopes of fulfilling a lifelong dream, a chance at redemption, a chance to prove that it was possible.

But the long season that stretched from the coolness of April to the biting raw wind of late October has come to an end.

The rollercoaster ride is over. The Boys of Summer have gone home. And the collective heart of New England is bleeding.

But that hope will remain in the hearts of Little League and sandlot baseball players everywhere who dream of victory and glory.

For Wade Boggs, however, the chance has slipped away. And as he sat teary-eyed on the bench in the dugout, looking out at the Mets celebrating, it became apparent. Wade Boggs was once a young kid with dreams.

co-chairman and School Committee member. "We're hoping a study conducted by a consultant will help the commission make plans on how to improve desperately needed child care services in the city."

Rizzo proposed forming the commission to evaluate and improve day care services after numerous parents aired their frustrations about limited day care facilities in the city at School Committee meetings last spring.

Rizzo said the day care problem is citywide and exceeds the bounds of the school department.

The commission plans to hire a consultant next month to conduct a needs assessment study. In the interim, the commission is gathering information from other city groups and agencies that have done surveys on city day care programs in the past, according to School Committee member Lynne Sullivan, who also co-chairs the commission.

"We want to gather as much information as possible before we charge the consultant with conducting a study," Sullivan said. "We don't want duplication of work that others have already done."

Extended day programs in school buildings will be included in the study but "it's not the whole thing," Sullivan said. "The day care problem goes way beyond the space needs in the school system," Sullivan said.

The commission has met with the directors of extended day programs to determine the space needs and constraints in the schools. The commission's long term goal is to get various city departments to work cooperatively on improving day care services, according to Rizzo.

"We know there will be an increased demand for services as kindergarten and pre-school enrollment is increasing and will do so for quite some time," Rizzo said. "The day care problem we have now will only get worse if we don't try to do something about it now."

Included in the study will be space needs, transportation, funding and program management that are all required to improve day care services in the city.

Neighbors support proposed restaurant

NEWTON — Some enthusiastic Newton Corner residents decided not to watch the World Series and went instead to City Hall, where they supported the owner of a proposed area restaurant.

Neighbors attending last week's Land Use Committee public hearing said the restaurant, to be built by Newton Corner resident Lynn Shaffer in developer Jack Antaramian's soon-to-be completed 400 Centre St. building, will benefit the area.

Peter Smith, chairman of the Newton Corner Neighborhood Association (NCNA) cafe task force, said his organization favors the proposal because it would help revitalize the area and help maintain the dwindling neighborhood atmosphere.

"There is no place like this for Newton Corner residents to go right now," he said. "We need a restaurant like this."

Newton Corner resident Pat Rand was a little more specific.

"The only place people in Newton Corner can go for breakfast right now is the Pizza Hut, or Howard Johnson's," she said. "I really don't think either of those is a great place to eat breakfast."

In order to open the restaurant, which she said will serve breakfast, lunch and dinner as well as sell bakery goods, newspapers and magazines and flowers, Shaffer must obtain permission from the Board of Aldermen to waive parking restrictions.

In addition, she is seeking a seven-day beer and wine license from the Licensing Commission.

Under present zoning law, Shaffer could only open a 21-seat restaurant because the codes require one parking space for every three customers.

Shaffer, however, wants to build a restaurant that holds 102 patrons. She wants 84 seats for lunch-time customers and 102 for dinner.

To do that, the board would have to grant the waiver. Shaffer argued that because the majority of office workers in the new building would be gone by the dinner rush, the 120 parking spaces that serve the building would be more than adequate.

Shaffer countered the Planning Department's objections to the density of the proposal by pointing out she has the support of the 300-member NCNA.

In addition, she said the restaurant would generate only about 10 cars per hour, a figure she said does not greatly exacerbate the area's traffic problems.

She also reminded aldermen that the major fear area residents have about new construction is a proliferation of office space. She said she may be forced to consider converting plans for the 3,000 sq. ft. restaurant to office space if the board does not approve her petition.

"I don't think it would be profitable to open up a 21-seat restaurant," she said. "Urbanization does not have to be negative."

School for adults wants to pay own bills

NEWTON — The department responsible for taking education beyond the public schools to average citizens wants the ability to pay its expenses more quickly.

Community Schools, which offers special courses for any Newton resident, has asked the aldermanic Finance Committee to support its request to set up a revolving account so it could use tuitions to pay its bills.

FinCom seemed to support the idea, but some members fear it would take from aldermen their responsibility of monitoring each department's expense.

"It feels a little bit like we're being irresponsible," Alderman Sondra Shick said.

Under the present system, the department turns over tuitions to the city treasury, then must ask aldermen to let it use those funds to pay off bills.

This usually requires the department to appear before FinCom, then get the backing of the full Board of Aldermen.

City Treasurer Theodore Scafidi then has to process the bills and Mayor Theodore D. Mann has to sign the expense order.

"It will be five to 10 weeks I'll have to wait for that money," said Phyllis Phillips, Community School's recently appointed executive director. "In just the short time I have been on the job, it does not appear that we can meet out obligations in a timely manner."

Departmental expenses include the $7 to $10 an hour paid to teachers, who include anyone willing to share an interest or expertise with residents. This fall, for example, three aldermen are offering courses.

Other expenses include the biannual catalogue of courses the department publishes, salaries for its two full-time employees and office supplies, Phillips said.

FinCom Chairman Paul Coletti advised Phillips and Community Schools Commission Chairman Barbara Sullivan to set up guidelines for the revolving account that would guarantee accountability.

He suggested both meet representatives of Arthur Anderson, the firm which audits city expenditures to work out such a system.

City to consider joining disposal system

NEWTON — City officials are seeking aldermanic approval to join a regional solid waste disposal system that could save the city $200,000 annually.

According to Public Works Commissioner James Hickey, the city could save money it now spends on hauling solid waste out of the city by joining Cambridge, Brookline, Watertown and Belmont in a regional plan to recycle metal and glass cans and bottles and old newspapers.

The plan, administered by the state Bureau of Solid Waste Management (SWM), would enable the city to dispose of an estimated 5,000 tons of recyclable waste free of charge, he said.

SWM Recycling Director John Schall said the state would provide trucks to haul the waste and a Materials Recovery Facility (MRF) to sort and break down the waste.

In addition, Schall said the state will provide at least one curbside collection box to each household in the city. The blue containers will be large enough, he said, to enable an average household to store a week's worth of recyclable waste.

To make the plan work, Schall said the city must pass an ordinance requiring residents to separate the waste from the rest of the trash. He said studies show up to 10-fold increases in percentages of those who separate waste when faced with penalties for non-compliance.

In addition to money the city would not have to spend to collect and haul the 5,000 tons of recyclable waste, Schall said the city would receive a percentage of any money generated by the sale of up-graded materials by the MRFs.

What makes this program attractive to industry, Schall said, is the combined waste output of the five communities. The reason, he added, is that industry can count on a steady stream of high-quality used materials with a regional project as opposed to shaky sources from individual communities.

Waltham man dies in Newton car crash

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — A 30-year-old Waltham man was killed early Sunday morning in a car accident on Chestnut Street but a passenger, also of Waltham, escaped injury, according to police.

Gary B. Kaupelis, of 13 Oak St., was pronounced dead on arrival at Newton-Wellesley Hospital at about 3:30 a.m. The accident reportedly occurred at 3:18 a.m. on a curve at 538 Chestnut St. between Beacon Street and Commonwealth Avenue.

The circumstances and cause of the accident are unknown at this time, police said. It was reportedly a one car accident and it is under investigation by police.

The passenger, Alison Forbes of 1490 Trapelo Road, was unavailable for comment.

North's roof repairs voted begrudgingly

NEWTON — Roof repair work at Newton North High School, stalled by what some aldermen contend was administrative incompetence, has been approved begrudingly by the full board.

Aldermen voted to approve the $664,000 project, which should have been 30 percent complete before this winter. But not before aldermen George Mansfield, Joshua Davidson, Elaine Gentile and Richard McGrath took a bite out of the administration's hide.

During the role call, Davidson voted for it "regrettedly." Mansfield also said "yes," but outdid his colleague with a "very regrettedly."

Mansfield charged the administration had failed to answer key questions and give timely information to the board about the Newton North repairs. As a result, he said, work will likely begin late and the city will probably end up blaming the board for the delays.

During debate, some aldermen stressed nothing was to be gained by voting down the money or delaying work. "There's no question the educational program is being compromised by a leaky roof," Alderman Louis Irwin said.

But Mansfield, chairman of the Public Facilities Committee (PFC), rose in anger to make his point.

Three times the PFC requested meetings with a representative of the project's design firm, Simpson, Gumpertz & Heger, and in each case those sessions were canceled, he said.

Because of its urgency, the Finance Committee was forced to take up the project at a special meeting and could not deliver a written report of its deliberations, he said.

Building Commissioner James Cameron has stressed the need to get work going before the end of this construction season. Around 30 percent of the replacements and repairs are so critical they should be done before it gets too cold to continue work, he has said.

Newly-purchased hotel to charge less

NEWTON - The Days Inn hotel chain taking over three area Holiday Inns expects to charge $20 to $30 a night less than two new hotels proposed for nearby Waltham, according to Michael A. Leven, chief operating officer of the Atlanta-based chain.

Leven, a native New Englander who attended Boston Latin School and graduated from Tufts University, said he was well aware of plans for new hotels in Waltham at the Route 128-Winter Street intersection where four hotels already exist.

Leven said his company paid a total of $53 million to buy the Woburn, Burlington and Newton Holiday Inns and the franchise Holiday Inn in White Plains New York. "I don't have the exact figures with me, but each purchase cost about the same with differences depending on the number of rooms," he said.

The former Newton Holiday Inn has 193 rooms, the Burlington facility 176 and the Woburn inn 159 rooms. Days Inns of America Inc. describes itself as "the largest lodging chain in the U.S. concentrating on the economy segment of the market."

Jefferson tries to curb permit parking petition

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The first permit parking petition to reach the Board of Aldermen hit an expected stumbling block last week as Alderman Matthew Jefferson successfully stalled board action.

Jefferson, a staunch opponent of the exclusionary parking ordinance, chartered a petition requesting that only residents be allowed to park on Lowell Avenue and Otis Street.

This action delays for two weeks board action on any petition. While Jefferson is not optimistic he will persuade his colleagues to vote with him, he insists he will not go down quietly.

"No way," he said. "I don't want this and this city does not need such an ordinance that excludes taxpayers from parking on streets their taxes help to maintain. This is just my opening salvo in the war against permit parking."

During debate over the ordinance last year, Jefferson did everything he could in an unsuccessful fight to kill the ordinance.

The board voted for permit parking, but each individual petition must go before a number of city departments. If accepted by the Public Works Department and the Traffic Commission, petitions must then win approval from the board. If approved by the board, violators will be subject to a $10 fine.

The petition was intitiated by Alderman Louis Irwin on behalf of himself and other area residents. Irwin said residents in the area are unable to park in front of their homes because of an overflow of cars from Newton North High School.

In addition to restricting parking on those streets, Irwin's petition asks that St. John's Parish on 297 Lowell Ave. be given 15 temporary parking permits to allow those attending services and other church functions to park without penalty.

While Irwin and his neighbors argued the measure is a necessary solution to those problems, Jefferson said it would be unfair to exclude other city residents from parking.

"This ordinance only benefits a few at the expense and detriment of many," he said. "Every permit parking petition that comes before this board will be a hard-fought affair because I do not plan on giving up easily."

In order for neighbors to request permit parking, they first must gather signatures from at least one person in half the homes on a given street. The petition is then scrutinized by city departments and the board.

Once enacted, residents will be issued two parking permits per household to be placed on their car's windshields. In addition, residents will be issued two temporary visitor permits per household to allow guests to park without facing the fine.

The Graphic endorses ...

For statewide offices

Endorsements by the Newton Graphic for statewide offices in this year's election are decidedly one-sided. This, in one sense, is regrettable; a healthy two-party system with checks and balances is sorely needed on Beacon Hill. But the state Republican Party has failed to produce strong candidates even in races where the Democratic candidates were not overwhelmingly favored. We strongly urge the Republicans again to revive their party while it still shows some signs of life.

For Governor:

Michael Dukakis is riding a boom — be it of his making or not. George Kariotis seems to be a decent and informed candidate, and we applaud him for tackling insurmountable odds. But he simply does not have the background to be governor. The state has prospered under Dukakis and it is no fluke that he is being mentioned as a national candidate in 1988.

For Lt. Governor:

Evelyn Murphy has a long public service record, including time in the executive branch as secretary of environmental affairs. Her experience, which opponent Nicholas Nikitas lacks, deserves our vote.

For Attorney General:

Jim Shannon may be quick to capitalize on the political misfortunes of others, but he nonetheless is our choice. When questioned by our editorial board, Shannon spelled out detailed plans for numerous problems an attorney general would be likely to face — be they organized crime or the drug problem. Ted Harrington is an attractive candidate with a sackful of experience, but his candidacy is not nearly as solid as Shannon's.

For Treasurer:

The campaign for state treasurer, which actually was painful to observe, brought a whole new meaning to the word "mudslinging." Like it or not, Bob Crane's lottery has been a national sensation. Joyce Hampers has tried to link him to sleazy deals, but has produced little hard evidence to back up her claims. We give the nod to Mr. Crane.

For Secretary:

Michael Connolly has done a fine job in this post, expanding and making the Secretary of State's office more visible. There seems no substantial reason to replace him with Republican Deborah Cochran.

For Auditor:

We believe Joe DeNucci will make a fine auditor. Although William Robinson is an able candidate, DeNucci's local ties and his extensive human services background cannot be ignored. The "rocks-in-my-head" commercial was a low blow that fit right in with much of the GOP's negative campaigning this season.

A primer on ballot questions

You will be saving time and functioning as an informed voter Nov. 4 by taking advantage of the Blue Book mailed to all registrants. With a Democratic steamroller about to flatten hapless Republicans, referendum questions give this state election most of its competitive flavor.

Abortion, state aid to private schools, a state spending cap and seat belt law repeal are foremost among the eight statewide choices.

If anything, the state secretary's office has done its informational job too well. Arguments pro and con have been so clearly and fully summed up that a voter will be first pulled one way, then the other.

There was a time when paper ballot verbiage or the small print above voting machine levers discouraged people in the precinct booths. No longer. Since this is the pre-election week in which decisions can be made, Transcript Newspapers are offering a referendum preview, just as they are presented in the official pamphlet. Clip and mark a preference, then take designated choices with you to the polling place:

1. Regulating or prohibiting abortion:

A YES vote would change the state constitution to allow the state Legislature to regulate or prohibit abortion or the funding of abortion, to the extent permitted by the United State Constitution.

A NO vote would leave the state constitution unchanged and continue state constitutional protection of abortion.

2. Government aid to non-public schools and students:

A YES vote would change the state constitution to allow government aid to non-public schools and non-public school students, to the extent allowed by the United State Constitution.

A NO vote would keep in the state constitution the current restrictions on government aid to non-public schools and non-public school students.

3. Limiting state tax revenue increases:

A YES vote would limit increases in state tax revenue.

A NO vote would leave state tax laws unchanged.

4. Cleaning up oil and hazardous materials:

A YES vote would require that specific timetables and standards be met in cleaning up places where oil or hazardous materials have been disposed of.

A NO vote would not establish such new requirements for cleaning up places where oil and hazardous materials have been disposed of.

5. Requiring use of safety belts in motor vehicles:

A YES vote would keep in place the state law that requires use of safety belts in motor vehicles.

A NO vote would repeal the state law that requires use of safety belts in motor vehicles.

6. Voter registration by mail:

A YES vote would provide a system of voter registration by mail.

A NO vote would continue the present requirement that most voters register in person.

7. National health program:

A YES vote would urge the United States Congress to enact a national health program that meets certain goals.

A NO vote would not urge the United States Congress to enact the proposed national health program.

8. National acid rain control program:

A YES vote would urge the President and Congress to enact a national acid rain control program that meets certain goals.

A NO vote would not urge the President and Congress to enact the proposed national acid rain program.

Star Wars worth fighting for?

By Lynn Holbein

Should Reagan insist on keeping a system which would be very expensive, is only a theoretical blueprint, would only be partially effective, and might make nuclear war more likely?

At the recent superpower meeting in Iceland, did President Reagan drive a hard but necessary bargain, or should he have traded Star Wars (except for laboratory research) for the extremely deep cuts in nuclear weapons which were offered?

Since Star Wars (the 'Strategic Defense Initiative') may be a key issue for years to come, we owe it to ourselves as citizens of a democracy to become informed about it. Here are three key questions:

1. Can we afford Star Wars?

Estimates are that Star Wars would cost approximately 700 billion dollars, according to the Union of Concerned Scientists. Costs could go as high as a trillion depending upon which options are deployed.

In the 200 years between 1776 when our country was founded, and 1980 when Jimmy Carter left office, the total of all budget deficits was one trillion dollars. In the last six years, due mostly to the military build-up, we have doubled that deficit, and the U.S. now has a debt of two trillion dollars.

How much is a trillion? It's very hard to grasp. One trillion seconds, for instance, would last for 31,709 years. A trillion seconds ago cavemen were huddled around their fires.

Can we afford to increase our national debt by over two-thirds of a trillion dollars?

2. Would Star Wars work?

Developing Star Wars, scientists say, would require the scientific breakthroughs of nine Manhattan projects ... the know-how of nine projects, each as complex as building the atomic bomb. (Meanwhile, our scientists, instead of developing products to keep the civilian economy strong, to compete against the Japanese and others, would be drained to develop Star Wars.)

Once built, most Americans would be amazed to learn that Star Wars is only capable of destroying one type of nuclear weapon — ballistic missiles which arc up into the earth's atmosphere before returning to strike the earth. Star Wars would be deployed high in space, only capable of reaching weapons that make that high arc. Any type of missile which is lower flying — which includes those launched from submarines, airplanes, or new ground-hugging cruise missiles — could still fly unchallenged to destroy a city or military base.

So, if we spent the money, and were able to master the unbelievably complex technology, the Soviets could counter by simply increasing the submarine, airplane and cruise missiles which evade Star Wars.

3. Would Star Wars make us safer?

"In private, some government authorities agree that both the Soviet development and the American Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI or Star Wars) are more likely to reach a result opposite from that intended: encourage an offensive arms race, bring about the death of the 1972 treaty limiting anti-missile defenses (the ABM treaty) and prompt a shift toward a more hostile, hairtrigger relationship between the two powers," reported the New York Times last year.

The government's Office of Technology Assissment reports that "the development of a defense against intercontinental missiles might make nuclear war between the U.S. and the Soviet Union more likely.

"If both nations possessed Star Wars, there would be an extremely dangerous possibility of a nuclear surprise attack. Under this theory, a first strike would so cripple the adversary that the attacker's defenses could ward off most retaliation.

"Perhaps most important," concludes the report, "the potential risks for the other side to go first would also increase," according to the Times.

What are the conclusions? Each of us, as voters, must decide.

Our President has just returned from Iceland where he had the opportunity to trade all but laboratory Star Wars research for the deepest cuts in nuclear weapons ever contemplated by the superpowers. Should Reagan insist on keeping a system which would be very expensive, is only a theoretical blueprint, would only be partially effective, and might make nuclear war more likely?

Or should we urge our President and other elected officials to trade Star Wars for extremely deep cuts in nuclear weapons on both sides, and thus lower the number of weapons aimed at us all?

What would you choose?

(Lynn Holbein is on the executive board of Newton Action for Nuclear Disarmament, a grassroots freeze group with 500 members in Newton, Waltham, and surrounding towns.)

Answers to referendum questions

Question 1 — No.

The issue here does not relate to whether abortion should or should not be legal. Certain rights with regard to a choice have been dictated by Supreme Court decision. We should not interfere by having the control of funding of abortion as a matter of legislative prerogative. To do so would make abortion a privilege rather than a right. If passed, those least able to pay would suffer.

Question 2 — No.

We respect a parent's right to send children to private schools, but do not believe taxpayers should be required to provide financial support for non-public schools and students when such an option is exercised.

Question 3 — Yes.

Do not be misled by late attempts by the Legislature to pass a tax cap law weaker than that proposed here. Limiting state collection to a three-year average of the increase in wages and salaries should be done by this initiative petition, a well thought out measure. It will assure better state fiscal management, as with Proposition 2 1/2 for cities and towns.

Question 4 — Yes.

A number of leading environmentalist groups oppose the oil and hazardous waste cleanup requirement on two counts. We agree that the petition is flawed by impractical provisions and excessive cost factors. Its objective is good in principle. Attention given the subject should spur legislative action to furnish better solutions.

Question 5 — Yes.

The weight of evidence on continuation of the seat belt law is very much in favor of acceptance by the voters. Hospital emergency units, safety officials and insurers are in agreement the law has saved lives and lessened injury from highway accidents.

Question 6 — Yes.

Voter registration by mail is a worthwhile procedure which, we hope, will increase the number of registered voters who find it difficult or impossible to register under present conditions. Computerization will provide ample safeguards against fraud.

Question 7 — No.

An advisory opinion is being sought in asking the Congress to enact a national health program. The system now in place is adequate.

Question 10 — No.

A question to be answered only by voters in two precincts in Newton Corner and one precinct in Chestnut Hill regarding the revival of trolley service through Brighton and parts of Newton to Watertown Square.

While there is cause for concern among preservationists in Newton Corner, given the rapid pace of development there, the old trolley tracks are not among the facilities that should be saved. They are a nuisance and a danger to motorists. Rip them up and throw them out, along with the notion that trolley service is superior to buses.

Opposes government control of private lives

To the Editor:
Why bother to vote in November? After all, the few interesting races were effectively decided in the Primary. Somebody else can take the trouble to make it official.

But there are in fact vital decisions being made on the ballot in November, not seen even by those Newtonites who actually voted in September. These are the public issue questions appearing at the very top of the ballot. Most of these questions are binding votes — if the voters pass them, they are law.

I am most concerned about Question #1, a proposed constitutional amendment which would restrict or prohibit abortions. If it passes, our legislators could interfere with the private personal decisions of women across the state, in virtually any way they wanted. The only limitations would be that an abortion to save the very life of a woman could not be prevented, and nothing contrary to the U.S. Constitution would be valid.

The Legislature could immediately end funding for abortion procedures not only under state-paid Medicaid, but also under any individual's private health plans. It could also invent absurd regulations to reduce women's access to abortion. Women who choose abortion are facing a tough enough decision as it is; the Legislature wants to make it more difficult, demeaning, and traumatic for them to exercise that choice.

Question #1 furthermore is clearly designed with an eye on the future Reagan Supreme Court. It would allow the Legislature to ban abortions outright, the moment the Court swayed from its previous 5 to 4 pro-choice rulings.

I oppose government control of private lives. The decision to continue or terminate a pregnancy is one of the most private and personal of all. Let's keep it that way by going to the polls in November, and defeating Question #1.

Ballot question 2 remnant of anti-Catholic era

To the editor:

Several times in recent months the media have referred to Referendum Question 2 as intended to provide "aid to private schools." Unfortunately, this is simply incorrect.

Strangely, however, the opponents of Question 2 are devoting most of their efforts to spreading this same false idea. The reason is that the present laws they are defending are, in fact, morally indefensible - they are discriminatory, openly intended when passed to injure and exclude Catholic immigrants. Today they continue to punish Catholic schoolchildren, denying them certain benefits which are their constitutional right elsewhere in the United States.

Opponents of Question 2 do not want it said that it is Massachusetts which is different, Massachusetts which does not conform to the Bill of Rights or that the language of the question simply says Massachusetts shall simply conform to the U.S. Constitution in the area of benefits to private school students. Hence the use, by opponents, of falsehoods ("aid to private schools") and innuendos ("separation of Church and State"), with behind them all the old stereotypes of anti-Catholic bigotry - that somehow Catholics and Catholic schools are a threat to American freedom.

The present laws that opponents of Question 2 are defending represent the ugliest episode in our State's history, our own equivalent to the "black codes" and segregation laws of the South. They were passed when our governor and every member of the Legislature but two were members of the Native American or "Know-Nothing" Party. Their whole policy was to keep Catholics out of America or harm them as much as possible. The 1855 Know-Nothing Amendment, which is the law in question, was explicitly intended to hinder the foundation of Catholic schools - at a time when the most virulent anti-Catholic, anti-immigrant prejudices were being taught in all the public schools.

No wonder the defenders of the present law, who choose to range themselves with the Know-Nothings, defending their bigotry, hatred, and perversion of the Massachusetts State Constitution to infringe upon freedom of religion, do not want the facts to be known.

In fact, the 1855 Know-Nothing Law was allowed to sleep after World War II and only resurrected in 1978 by a group that went to court to stop Catholic schoolchildren from receiving textbook loans as they do throughout the rest of the country. Free books have not undermined the "separation of Church and State" or the public schools in the rest of America, or in Massachusetts from 1945 to 1978, any more than free polio shots.

Question 2 asks Massachusetts to stop present discrimination. It asks Massachusetts to repudiate its own historic spiritual disease, - religious bigotry - and eliminate its last vestiges from our law.

Aid to El Salvador airlift needs volunteers

To the Editor:
There are in El Salvador, in addition to the victims of the recent earthquake, thousands of Civilian war refugees living in camps and war zones who are not receiving medical aid — children, who are waiting to be shipped to the United States for treatment, and many victims who have lost limbs. On Nov. 30 three jets, piloted by Vietnam Veterans will leave Los Angeles with 25 tons of medical supplies for El Salvador.

The airlift will not only deliver supplies to the victims, but will help set up a prosthetics clinic to provide artificial limbs to soldiers and civilians who were wounded in the seven year civil war. For the first time Salvadoran people will have access to medicines regardless of where they live and whom they politically support.

The airlift is a campaign to create medical neutrality in a country whose government systematically violates it. The Salvadoran Army has arrested and tortured health workers in refugee camps and Red Cross teams have been prevented from reaching rural areas with vaccines and mobile clinics.

Permanent access to health care is the objective of the airlift. To ensure that medical supplies get delivered throughout El Salvador, a 50 person delegation of union leaders, health professionals, and elected officials will accompany the airlift. Church officials will coordinate the distribution of the supplies and keep health care flowing to all parts of the country.

The airlift needs names of nurses, doctors, Vietnam Veterans, church people, and others who are sympathetic to this project and interested in being a part of it. I urge the public to get involved in some way. If you want more information please call Mike Prokosch, 14 Brent St., Boston, at 282-3783.

PO workers using precious parking spaces

To the editor:

My request is that post office officials investigate the parking problem in Newton Centre, near Sumner St., involving post office employees.

Why are highly demanded meter spots habitually occupied by cars of postal worker? The post office should recognize the dilemma of shoppers trying to locate parking spaces in this area. Shoppers are often unfairly penalized with tickets as they are prevented from getting legal spots.

Separate parking for post office employees is both advisable and necessary. They too must be endlessly frustrated reloading coins in these meters.

Resource for parents of blind

To the editor:

Blindness among children is increasing. Many of these children have multiple handicaps. Some parents of blind and visually impaired young children have never known another young child with a similar problem. The Parent Resource Center of the International Institute for the Visually Impaired, 0-7, Inc. is a source of help and hope.

I would appreciate your cooperation in publishing this letter so that we might reach out to parents, who otherwise might be isolated with their problems. Parents of blind and visually impaired children may share their concerns by calling (617) 332-4014 or writing to the Parent Resource Center at:

Parents Resource Center, International Institute for Visually Impaired, 0-7, Inc., 230 Central Street, Aburndale, Ma. 02166-2399

This is a new program for which, as long as it is possible, there will be no charge to parents. The Parents Resource Center is partly supported by the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind, but we are dependent on caring persons and agencies for most of our funds. We appreciate the involvement of the many Lions Clubs in the communities your paper serves.

The staff of the Parent Resource Center and parents are planning informational meetings, playgroups, conferences, speakers, children's programs, field trips and other activities for 1986-87. We have a parent group- Early Years Education and Support- (EYES). Some of our literature for parents is printed in Spanish. We are planning outreach programs. A part time parent coordinator and educational coordinator are available to answer questions, provide information and put parents in touch with one another.

When we took the fear out of Halloween, the fun went with it

By Kevin C. Kennedy

Kids are getting the wrong end of the stick, these days, when it comes to Halloween. Grownups, needless to say, are the ones responsible. Abductions and kidnappings, apples with razor blades in them, Clark bars laced with drugs and a number of other untraditional Halloween horror stories have taken all the gusto out of the holiday and left us with a pale ghost of what kids who are now parents used to enjoy.

Do we dare let the kids know the sheer delight we used to derive from our annual nod to the druidic deviltry our own elders had worked so hard to beat out of us and our society?

Do kids today know how to pin doorbells? A simple pin, jammed into the side of the bell button, was all that was needed. The disgruntled homeowner had to leave off whatever relaxing pasttime he was dallying with to come to the door and unpin the bell, as leering young lunatics squealed with delight in their shadowy hiding places.

Do kids today know how to pin horns? This little number, accomplished with a stick warped under the steering wheel and over the horn button, was preferable to the doorbell maneuver in that it instantly upset an entire neighborhood. By the time the hapless victim showed up in his slippers and bathrobe to stop the clamor, there was a head in the front window of every house on the block.

Of course, too many pinned horns would finally put the neighborhood vigilante group on alert, at which time a couple of pinned doorbells could be applied with heartening results.

How about the garbage can number. Take two garbage cans, put one on either side of a dark street and run a rope between them. First car to come along hits the rope and drags the noisy, trash-spewing cans the length of the block before anyone knows what happened. This ploy is especially gratifying to the young devils when the first car to hit the rope happens to be a cop car prowling the area in response to complaints of pinned doorbells and horns.

My sister, Kate, wet her pants laughing when that happened on Euclid Avenue.

Then there was the one we all heard about — with the dog poop in the brown paper bag, set afire on the front steps. Ring the bell and watch the poor dupe try to put the fire out by stomping on the flaming bag. Actually, we heard about that one, but no one we knew ever actually tried it. A bit too messy, perhaps, and a bit too mean.

There was no real meanness in the pranks that used to attend the fall ritual, during which the demons we all knew lurked under our beds came out and ruled the globe for one night of sheer pandemonium. Grownups who could still remember the manifestations of their own wild side were tolerant. The few "Crabby Appletons" who could not take a joke paid for their rigidity by becoming favorite targets

While it looked like anti-social behavior, those forays in the fall had a tremendous socializing effect. Kids learned how far they could go and where they should stop. They also learned who was who among their peers. In a way, they also learned not to be afraid. While much was made of those devils, witches, skeletons and other evil beings, we knew that they could not hold a candle to us when it came to raising hell. When our gang hit the chilly, leaf-strewn streets in late October, no spook in his right mind would challenge us.

What do kids get now? They get dressed up and go to parties. They pile into the family wagon and go to the "haunted house," sponsored by some local service organization. There, amidst a lot of tacky props that couldn't scare the most timid soul, they are shown by paunchy middle-aged men that Halloween can yield a lot of "good, clean fun."

> The ritualistic, annual 'exorcism' has been turned away from its ancient druidic origins and redirected into commercialism and "good, clean fun."

So the devils don't get out every October. The ritualistic, annual "exorcism" has been turned away from its ancient druidic origins and redirected into commercialism and "good, clean fun."

So the kids keep it all in on Halloween these days. They have been denied one last harmless release of their devlish selves before they have to head indoors for the long, cold winter. But kids are kids, and they won't be held down for long.

Rest assured, they are going to find some opportunity to release that energy. It's going to be unsatisfying for them, and it's going to be troubling for their guardians. We have taken a crucial ritual away from them and we have put nothing in its place.

That is not fair to do to a kid who already has to stare at another kid's face on the side of a milk carton every morning. We know the fears, but where is the fun?

Town houses headed for Four Corners land

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — An unnamed developer will likely build townhouses on a 1.25 acre parcel of land near Four Corners, according to the attorney representing current property owner Newton Cemetery Corp.

Attorney Richard Lovell said Newton Cemetery Corp is on the verge of selling the property, which used to be used for that company's greenhouse facilities.

Lovell told those attending last week's Land Use Committee Public hearing that the company was hoping to reach a sales agreement with a developer he would not name in two or three weeks.

Lovell was in City Hall for the first step in a process to change the zone of the 1121 Beacon St. site from unzoned land to Residence E.

A Residence E zone would enable the developer to build townhouses by right or up to a five-story apartment building with aldermanic permission.

Richard said the new property owner will probably opt for the townhouses, which are less intensive — making it easier to win neighborhood approval.

Last May, Newton Cemetery officials successful obtained aldermanic permission to build a new greenhouse facility off Commonwealth Avenue. One stipulation was that Newton Cemetery officials had to win alermanic approval to rezone the Four Corners parcel of land before selling it.

The stipulation was a concession to Four Corners residents who did not want anymore commercial development in their neighborhood.

There was no public opposition to Richard's request but one resident, Nancy Cohen, said she was concerned that the new property owner would build a five-story apartment — the maximum use allowed by law.

Alderman Richard McGrath, however, explained that such a use would require 16 votes from the board.

"It would be much easier to go for townhouses," he said. "It would be much less likely that we would allow a five-story apartment building there."

Lovell said construction on the new greenhouse facilities should be completed by the early spring. The cemetery's proposal last May came up against stiff opposition from Commonwealth Avenue residents concerned that the new building would disrupt their neighborhood.

The proposal also was opposed initially by Four Corners residents but meetings with members of both communities ended with the compromise Lovell is seeking.

The zone change petition will face a Land Use Committee vote before going to the full board.

Looking to put some 'fun' back in Bullough's Pond

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Residents concerned about the fate of Bullough's Pond will gather in a public hearing this week to discuss ways to return the pond to its turn-of-the-century status as a passive recreation area.

The meeting, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the War Memorial Auditorium at City Hall, will feature a status report from the Boston firm studying the pond's deterioration.

"We'll be looking for input from the community," said Eileen Pannetier, project manager for Camp Dresser & McKee, Inc.. "We'd like to get as many comments and questions as we can. It gives a lot of direction as to where to go with the study."

Since March, biologists from the firm have been conducting biweekly surveys at Bullough's to create a comprehensive picture of the factors working to undermine the pond's ecological health.

The survey work has included vegetation mapping, storm drain sampling, chemical water quality tests and "sediment grabs" to determine the composition of the pond's base.

In the summer of 1984, state biologists found that Bullough's, which powered the city's first grist mill, would become an overgrown swamp unless steps were taken to stop the accelerated growth of algae and weeds.

Manmade influences have put the pond into a state of "hyper-eutrophication," a process of rapidly accelerated natural growth of vegetation. Silt accumulation has reduced the pond's depth significantly, causing an algae and nutrient overload which feeds the eutrophication process.

The state's initial examination ranked the pond at "12" on 15-point scale of deteroriating quality.

Neighbors in the area have since formed the "Bullough's Pond Association" to push for a plan to bring swimming, boating and skating back to the pond.

Pannetier said her tests at Bullough's so far have revealed "nothing startlingly different from what had been found there previously."

The bacterial problem, in the form of coliform counts, that was uncovered two years ago has not surfaced again, but all the tests needed to evaluate the area's storm drains have not been completed, she said.

Camp Dresser & McKee began its survey after the city received a $40,600 Clean Lakes Program grant from the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

The city's share of study amounts to $17,400 or 30 percent of the total cost. An application has been filed with state to help pay for a long-term restoration project.

Next week's hearing is the second in a series of three sessions with residents. A final hearing will be held early next summer at the conclusion of the year-long study.

Camp Dresser & McKee biologists have performed similar studies on three ponds in Lynn and one in Wakefield. The firm is currently in the midst of survey work on ponds in Worcester and Framingham.

Neighbors wary of BC's liquor license

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Boston College continues to face stiff opposition to plans for housing the Alumni Association on its Newton Centre campus.

Last week, the Licensing Commission denied BC's request for a seven-day club license. The license, according to BC Director of Community Affairs Laurence Barton, was to be used for parties and other functions associated with the Alumni Association.

Neighbors, however, feared that the seven-day club license would turn the Newton Centre campus into a bar room.

The Land Use Committee voted to delay action on BC's request for approval of a site plan to expand Putnam House on the Newton Centre campus. The expansion, according to Barton, is to allow the Alumni Associtation to use that facility.

The old facility, Alumni Hall on Commonwealth Avenue, was demolished to make room for new dormitories. Barton said Putnam Hall has to be expanded, because it is too small as is to house the Alumni Association offices.

State Rep. David Cohen, D-Newton, was on hand to offer support to neighbors.

"I think that it is important to attach adequate safeguards to the petition so the neighborhood is protected from any intensification of the site," he said. "Any time a college asks for a liquor license in a residential area, it is incumbent on public officials to make sure the residential quality of the area is not jeopardized."

Cohen said he would like to see BC officials work with the community to reach a compromise.

Alderman Richard McGrath said his colleagues on the Land Use Committee will consider a number of conditions on the petition he said will limit BC's usage of Putnam House.

"The neighbor's main concern is the increased use of the Centre Street campus," he said.

McGrath said the conditions include allowing Putnam House to be used only for official Alumni Association or BC administration functions; providing on-campus parking for every Putnam House employee; BC should provide additional on-campus parking and prevent off-campus parking; BC must meet with neighbors four times per year and the site plan must be approved annually.

McGrath said the committee did not vote on any of those conditions, some of which Barton called "patently illegal."

"Many of the neighbors have legitimate concerns," he said. "But they have been aroused to a state of high anxiety and panic because of a few individuals who have been manipulating the issue."

He added some of the concerns are "red herrings."

"We are certainly dissappointed by the Licensing Commission decision," he said. "While we applied for a seven-day club license, that does not mean we will be running a bar room. It will be used for functions associated with the association and the administration."

Barton said BC is considering an appeal of the license denial to the Alcohol Beverage Control Commission.

The Land Use Committee delay will hold up construction work on Putnam House until next spring at the earliest, Barton said.

Association to honor adult volunteers

NEWTON — Since 1919 the Jewish Big Brother and Big Sister Association, a constituent agency of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies, has been providing adult companionship, positive role models and life enriching experiences to children from predominately single parent homes.

Throughout the years, thousands of children have benefited from the voluntary commitment made by Jewish men and women who were willing to give a few hours of their time a week to befriend a child.

During the association's 67th Anniversary Brunch, which will be held at 9:30 a.m. on Sunday, Nov. 2, on the Gosman Jewish Community Campus, these volunteers will be honored with a special award.

Karen Novakoff and Alan Glickman, co-chairpersons for the brunch, have also announced the morning's festivities which is being sponsored by Reebok. The brunch will feature a presentation by active Big and Little Brothers and Sisters.

You shouldn't buy contacts the way you buy eyeglasses.

Because contact lenses interact directly with your eyes, buying them requires more attention and care than buying eyeglasses. An improper prescription, fitting or lens type could cause problems – even for a veteran wearer.

The solution is an expert fitting by an eye doctor and professional follow-up care. Fitting by a Cambridge Eye Associates eye doctor includes a no-obligation in-office trial, instructions and a 15 day refund privilege. It costs just $25 to $40 depending on your type of lens. Our optional Vision Care Plus Program features unlimited follow-up visits with our eye doctor for about the price of a single visit with an individual eye doctor.

So deciding where to buy your contacts is as important as deciding to buy them in the first place. And the first place to buy contact lenses is Cambridge Eye Associates, New England's largest family of eye doctors.

The pros and cons of mandatory retirement necessary so young people can have access to jobs.

"It ventilates the society and it brings in new ideas," said David Lurensky, who retired as treasurer of a local company at age 70 and now serves the city part time as assistant sealer of weights and measures.

The concept of mandatory retirement and the despair some retirees feel can be traced, in part, to America's Protestant and capitalist traditions, according to Chris Mitchell of the state's Executive Office of Elderly Affairs.

America's pioneers carved homes out of the wilderness with muscle and sweat. They brought with them a sober Protestantism that taught people were placed on earth to toil.

As the nation grew industrially and economically, its capitalist doctrine defined a person's worth as the ability to work and produce. Families came to look upon the elderly as a burden. "You work and that's your value," Mitchell said.

An American in retirement today may feel worthless because the society he grew up in convinced him the elderly cannot contribute, said Elsie Frank, president of the Massachusetts Association for Older Americans (MAOA).

"You're being told you don't count anymore," said Frank, mother of Congressman Barney Frank. "You're made to feel useless."

But it's not likely the same person would feel that way in other parts of the world, particularly in China and Japan where the elderly have a "revered status," Mitchell said. Both cultures see in the elderly a source of wisdom and experience to be tapped by younger generations.

American senior citizens generally are accorded that closeness and respect only in small "ethnic enclaves," Mitchell said. "In East Boston, you can walk into a triple-decker and all the names in the mailbox are the same."

But Mitchell and Frank said society's attitude towards the elderly is changing.

People are living longer thanks to medical and nutritional advances and as their numbers increase, the elderly are showing they can contribute, Frank said.

Frank, 74, retired as a legal secretary four years ago to help her son run against then-Congresswoman Margaret Heckler.

"Right away, I got involved in a political campaign that took six months," she said.

Frank also took a part-time position with a mortgage investment firm and joined the board of directors for the MAOA. Her activities for the association sometimes take up an entire week, she said.

A combination of part-time employment and volunteering can maintain the retired person's vigor. A job gives the senior citizen a reason to dress up and escape solitary confinement in the home, Frank said.

"It helps to supplement your retirement income," she said. "And psychologically you're made to feel useful."

Volunteer work, such as that offered by community councils on aging, rewards the senior citizen with the sense of having contributed to others, Frank said.

It was the chance to volunteer that sustained her own mother for years, said Eloise Houghton. Her mother worked as a volunteer receptionist at City Hall under a program sponsored by the Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) of Newton, Wellesly and Weston.

But when her mother, now 92, contracted Parkinson's disease and could no longer work there, Houghton herself had to retire to take care of her. Thus began a difficult adjustment to retirement.

Houghton had experienced both sides of life offered to women, first as a mother and housewife, then as a fund-raiser for the American Friends Service Committee, the humanitarian arm of the Quakers.

Houghton divides old age into three categories — young, middle and ancient. People in the first group are generally vibrant and self-sustaining, but those in the third are slowly withering away and need constant attention. Usually their children, who often are nearing retirement themselves, must provide it.

"It can make retirement a deadly obligation," she said. "The parents do not want this. The challenge is to develop a productive life for early retirement while meeting the needs of the ancient elderly in a way that they feel loved to the end of their lives."

Houghton said she knew very little about the devastating effects of ancient old age when she first retired. Leaving her career to take care of her mother required a "tremendous adjustment," Houghton said.

"I didn't want to give up my work," said Houghton. "I worked it out slowly. I had a lot of support from my husband and my family. My mother tried."

Like her mother, Houghton has enriched the first phase of her retirement with volunteering. She is board chairman of the Newton Community Development Foundation, which develops and maintains affordable housing in Newton. And she has headed fund drives for the United Fund of Newton and Wellesley.

Women — especially housewives — often adjust easier to retirement because their lives change naturally as their children grow and because they are more likely to be satisfied by volunteer work, said Lois Harris, program director for RSVP.

"When most men retire, they don't know what to do with that added eight hours a day," said Harris.

As their children grow up, advance in school and move out of the home, mothers become less involved in their lives, she said. Adjusting to retirement for such women is a gradual process. This, however, is changing as housewives pursue careers and their husbands share more of the homemaking responsibilities.

Mayor: no easy answers

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — There will be no easy answers to the mounting questions over when or if people should be forced to retire, according to Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

"No one answer will serve every purpose," the mayor said at his weekly press conference. "It's something that's going to take a lot of soul searching."

The issue has arisen in Newton lately because the 65-year-old Leo Curry, head of the Fire and Wire Department, wants to continue working, even though state laws say he must retire.

Mann, like so many other city officials, admires the service Curry has provided municipal government, but laws have to be applied fairly, he said. Current state statute demands that employees in Curry's Civil Service classification retire at 65.

"It would be a shame to lose someone like him," Mann said. "I was hoping something could be worked out."

Retirement for many people is a "traumatic experience" because their work provided them with direction and purpose, he said.

"I have tremendous empathy for someone who has given so much and has so much to offer," said the mayor, who at 64 said he has no intention of retiring.

But not everyone is like Curry and wants to continue work beyond the usual retirement ages, Mann said. Some people need to retire for health reasons or simply because they have had enough of work. Designing a system of humane laws flexible enough to cover all possible human needs and conditions is difficult if not impossible, he said.

"We all have different chemistries," Mann said. "We're a mix, a potpurri of experiences.

Drug task force on hold

drug investigation outside their community, Fryar said.

"The old concept of a police officer working his beat, with drugs you just can't do it," he said.

Bella is expecting around 25 officers from the four communities to be involved in what he called the South Middlesex Task Force on Narcotics.

If they cannot be deputized for the entire county, Bella said around 25 officers may be given special status to work in all four communities.

McGonigle has been working out the language to form a similar anti-drug unit for communities in the Maynard area. An agreement there, which settles the issue of liability, could form a model for the local task force, Bella said.

As McGonigle and officials of the county district attorney's office work out the details, the participants are readying to put the task force in operation.

Waltham City Council and Watertown Town Council already have given their police chiefs authorization to join the anti-drug squad.

'The old concept of a police officer working his beat, with drugs you just can't do it.'
Sgt. Arthur Fryar

Newton's aldermanic Public Safety & Transportation Committee has approved the concept and its Legislation and Rules Committee will draft language for a mutual aid agreement. The full Board of Aldermen must eventually vote on the plan.

Chairman Verne Vance said the rules committee probably will not finish its deliberations until its Nov. 20 session.

Murder trial delayed

Court is also on the prosection team. He agreed the only reason for delay was scheduling a judge to hear the case.

"The Commonwealth is certainly not dragging its feet, and the defense is not dragging its feet either," said Bella. Bowler's attorney is former superior court judge Rudolph F. Pierce.

Sheila Farnese, the murder victim's mother, said the delays have been difficult for her and her family to deal with. She said a number of family members and friends had arranged time off from work and rescheduled other appointments in order to attend the trial.

Richard Farnese was stabbed in his heart around 1:30 a.m. in the Watertown apartment of Judy Williams Oct. 27, 1985. Farnese, who did not know Williams until that night, had given her a ride home from Father's First, a bar on Harvard Avenue in Allston.

According to testimony in previous court hearings, Bowler, whom Farnese also did not know, dropped by Williams's apartment shortly after they and two other friends of Williams arrived.

An argument between Bowler and Williams allegedly broke out, and a few minutes later, Farnese lay bleeding on the living room floor after being stabbed with an eight-inch kitchen knife.

Farnese was in a coma for the better part of nine days before he died in WalthamWeston Hospital on Nov. 5.

Bowler was arrested two days later by Watertown and Boston detectives in a bar in downtown Boston.

Bigelow needs zone change for reuse by artists groups

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann has asked the Law Department to decide if a zone change is needed so community artists groups can occupy space at the vacant Bigelow Junior High School.

"I can't move ahead until I get an opinion from the city solicitor," Mann said at his weekly press conference.

The Board of Aldermen has urged Mann to make at least some of the school available for local artists groups, many of whom lack space for performances or meetings.

All public school property is unzoned and must be rezoned to permit another use. City officials have said it could take months to rezone the building, if required, before the artists groups move in.

Aldermen on Oct. 10 authorized Mann to rent Bigelow space for $1, providing the groups purchase their own liability insurance.

They also urged the mayor to move the Boys and Girls Library, now located on Vernon Street, to the Bigelow.

The School Committee voted to turn the junior high over to the city this summer because of declining enrollment. The aldermanic Real Property Reuse Committee was negotiating renting space to artists groups at the time.

But the possibility that the School Department may need to reopen the Bigelow has complicated the issue.

A shortage of facilities at some elementary schools led the School Committee to call for a system-wide space study. The committee may decide by January whether to add grade six to the junior highs in order to free up classrooms at the elementary schools. But if they do so, the city will need a third junior high and be forced to reopen the Bigelow as soon as September 1988.

Worried that an empty Bigelow may be a target for vandalism, Mann has asked the Planning Department to study the feasibility of moving some city departments into the Bigelow. Most commonly mentioned candidates for relocating there are the Community Schools and Health departments, both of which are now housed outside City Hall.

This would still leave space for the artists groups, according to some aldermen. But the question over whether the city would have to rezone the Bigelow must be answered.

When the School Committee in 1985 first decided it would eventually close the Bigelow, the city hoped to sell or lease it and set aside the proceeds for the proposed new main library.

With a possible reuse of the building by the schools or a temporary occupancy by nonprofit artists groups, the city has excluded the Bigelow as a library funding source.

"In a very short time, somebody is trying to demonstrate a need for the building that could have financial consequences for the city and the schools," Mann said.

Mann said the School Committee has told him it will make its decision on reusing the Bigelow by Jan. 15. But aldermen have said the committee could vote to put off the decision to a later date.

The mayor said he has asked the city's Planning Department to determine what would be the best possible uses for the building and what must be done to secure it from vandalism.

"So obviously, all these questions at some point must be answered," Mann said.

Frank shrugs off conservative group's ratings

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Congressman Barney Frank has shrugged off the dismal rating his voting record on key defense and foreign policy issues recently received from the American Security Council (ASC), a national conservative citizens' group.

The Garden City Democrat was not alone at the bottom of the ASC's popularity list — every member of the Bay State's Congressional delegation received the same zero rating.

"That's typical for Massachusetts," said ASC President John M. Fischer. "Their delegation wins the dubious honor of having the most anti-defense voting record among all the 50 states."

But Frank, who described the ASC as a "right wing group," countered, "The fact that everybody in Massachusetts got a zero, both Republicans and Democrats, shows that ASC people think we should simply spend more and more money on defense items."

The 1986 ASC index, published every two years since 1970, measured the stances of each congressman on 10 "key national security votes."

None of the 13 members of the Massachusetts delegation are members of the Congressional division of the bipartisan "Coalition for Peace Through Strength," which is administered by the ASC.

"Peace Through Strength" members in the House received an average 87 percent rating from ASC, while House non-members averaged a score of 15 percent.

"The number of zero ratings in the House is depressing," said Fischer. "It shows that a huge block of House members — including all the Massachusetts representatives — are completely out of step with public opinion that overwhelmingly favors a strong U.S.

"Only nine senators were that extreme," he added. "And Massachusetts has two of them."

Carroll Center remembers Rose Walsh

NEWTON — A champagne reception and tea was held recently at the Carroll Center for the Blind in Newton to dedicate their grand living room in Raeder Hall in memory of the late Rose Walsh, former Boston society columnist.

Walsh, considered the Grande Dame of Boston Society, became a supporter of the work provided by the Carroll Center and during her later years, an annual Rose Walsh Ball was held to raise funds for the Carroll Center.

After her death the center established the Rose Walsh Fund, coordinated by Walsh's friend and escort Dr. Simon Devine of Wellesley. Through the efforts of Devine and the many friends of Rose Walsh the fund continues to be a lasting memorial and tribute to Walsh.

The Rose Walsh Room is located in Raeder Hall a beautifully restored tudor-style building that serves as the dormitory for newly blinded clients in rehabilitation training at the Carroll Center.

The room itself is a large and gracious living room that befits the beauty and style that was always attributed to Walsh.

Among the 150 guests in attendance to celebrate the dedication of the Rose Walsh Room was Eliot Norton who delivered an eloquent tribute that summarized Walsh's career and his 50 years of working with her.

Election day ballot questions and answers

Question 1: Regulating or prohibiting abortion

Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment that would change the state constitution to allow the state Legislature to regulate or prohibit abortion or the funding of abortion, to the extent permitted by the United States Constitution?

Please turn to page 24 for more referendum question information.

Question 2: Public aid to private schools

Do you approve of the adoption of an amendment that would change the state constitution to allow government aid to non-public schools and non-public school students, to the extent allowed by the United States Constitution?

Abortion proponents

A 'Yes' hands the issue over

By John Carpenter
Staff Writer

The people hoping voters will answer "Yes" to the first question on the November ballot say the issue of abortion should be put in the hands of elected state officials, not of seven unelected State Supreme Court judges.

They argue that if abortions are a matter of personal choice, then taxpayers should not have to pay more than $1.4 million each year for them.

And they are, as they have in the past, relying on emotional appeals to convince voters of their moral position.

"Anyone who has held a live infant in their arms or seen a baby born dead from an abortion knows the difference here. The difference we are talking about is life and death," said Dr. Joseph Stanton in a recent interview. Stanton is chairman of the Massachusetts Coalition for Responsible Government (MCRG).

Stanton also accused the pro-choice people of scare tactics in the campaign.

"They are going around telling people that, if we win, the day after the election all tax-funded abortions will end," he said. "That will only happen if our elected officials say it should. Right now our hands are tied by seven unelected judges who took the power of the purse strings away from our elected officials."

Stanton was referring to a State Supreme Court decision mandating publicly-funded abortions. He was asked to respond to the pro-choice argument that tax-funding for abortion protects the rights of the poor.

"The other side knows that in the states that have cut off abortion funding there has been no increase in illegal abortions or mortality rates," he said, citing "numerous studies" as evidence.

Stanton also argued that Massachusetts is in the minority, bucking 36 states which do not pay for elective or what he called "convenience" abortions.

Another key issue surrounding this question is the fact that the state is paying for abortions that are being performed out of state, according to Stanton.

Since the 1981 passage of the law requiring parental consent before minors can have an abortion, there has been a dramatic increase in the number of girls crossing the state line, Stanton said. He said the state is actually paying so that people can circumvent the law.

He also accused state officials of "stonewalling" in the face of anti-abortion lobbiests' request for information.

"We asked them for the names of abortion vendors and doctors and the amount being paid to each, including those out of state," he said. "They are refusing to give us the information."

Stanton hinted that a lawsuit may be in the offing to get this data released before the November election.

Asked what he thought of the polls showing the pro-choice forces winning the battle thus far, Stanton said he remained optimistic.

"I don't know who they are asking when they do these polls," he said. "We have armies of volunteers out working on this issue and no one has asked any of us. Besides, the people at the ballot box in November will be the real judge. We are very hopeful."

Stanton also refuted the polls by pointing to what he called the opposition's fear to face the voters.

"If they are really so confident in those figures then why did they spend so much time and effort trying to keep the question off the ballot," he asked.

Even if the question is defeated, Stanton said the anti-abortion movement will not be.

"Win, lose or draw, the pro-life movement will not atrophy. It will not die. We will never give up fighting for life's sacredness," he said.

Abortion opponents:

Question is phrased wrong

By John Carpenter
Staff Writer

WALTHAM — If the first referendum question on the November ballot were simply a "yes" or "no" on state-funded abortion, the people working against it say they would have a much easier time winning.

But, they say, the wording of the question is confusing people.

"The problem is simply that the wording of the question is so confusing. People who know how they feel about the issue don't know how they should vote on the question," said Susan Newsom, a spokesman for Planned Parenthood of Massachusetts. "Our job is to make sure people know that the pro-choice vote is 'No.'"

Newsom said a poll commissioned by Planned Parenthood early this year showed 82 percent of Massachusetts voters are pro-choice and 63 percent supported state-funded abortion.

But when people were asked how they felt about the ballot question, which purports to be a showdown on tax-funding of abortion, 44.5 percent said they would vote "yes," and 44.5 percent said they would vote "no."

Newsom accused the anti-abortion lobbyists of "deceiving" the voters by "telling people the question means one thing when it means something else."

The wording of the amendment would allow outright prohibition of abortions to the extent the U.S. Constitution does not stand in the way, according to Newsom. She said this would likely happen since the state Legislature is overwhelmingly anti-abortion.

She said the anti-abortionists are hoping to take control of abortion out of the state constitution and put it in the hands of the Legislature, so that abortion may be banned if the current opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court changes.

"A one vote switch in the United States Supreme Court will eliminate protection for safe, legal abortion, so protection under the Massachusetts Constitution is essential," reads the argument against the the amendment, published in a state pamphlet alongside an affirmative argument. "A NO vote keeps personal, private decisions about childbearing free from government control."

"Supporters of this constitutional amendment claim it will simply eliminate tax-funded abortions," the statement also reads. "In fact, the intent is to give our state legislators absolute power to prohibit all abortions except when the woman's life is at stake."

One would think that the Planned Parenthood people would be optimistic at the release of recent polls showing their position is favored by a large portion of the voters. But Newsom said she is wary of the polls.

"I don't know if they are using the exact wording to the referendum question when they are taking the polls," she said. "We believe that if the people understand what they are voting on, we will win. We have two-and-a-half weeks to educate them. Right now I'd say we are cautiously optimistic."

Aid opponents

Drains public schools' and taxpayers' monies

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

Both the public schools and Massachusetts taxpayers could suffer if the proposed amendment to the state constitution allowing public aid to private schools is enacted, say those who oppose ballot Question 2.

"Two things will happen if the amendment passes," said Mary Adelstein, referendum coordinator for the Massachusetts League of Women Voters (LWVM). "One, the public schools will be poorer, and two, the taxpayer will be poorer."

The LWVM is one of several groups which argues that the passage of ballot Question 2 would sap needed funds from public education, threaten the independence of private schools and possibly increase taxes to come up with the extra revenues they say would be needed to fund private schools.

These groups have formed the Citizens for Public Schools, a statewide organization working actively to defeat passage of the referendum question.

"The reason the League opposes the issue comes from our long-term concern for quality public education and equality in education," Adelstein said during a telephone interview yesterday.

"Proposition 2½, already-declining enrollments, Reagan budget cuts, and inadequate state aid have already taken a tremendous toll on Massachusetts public schools," an informational pamphlet distributed by the Citizens for Public Schools adds. "With revenue sources shrinking, any aid to private or parochial schools will probably be taken from already-strapped public school budgets."

The amendment's opponents say while the Commonwealth is already among the top 12 states in its provision of health, transportation and other services to private schools — which also receive tax exemptions — it still lags behind in public education funding. Diverting funds to private education would exacerbate the problem, they say.

"If public schools were only level-funded at present budgets, and Question 2 passed, millions of dollars in new tax revenue would be required to fund it," the pamphlet states. "If each of the state's 114,000 private school students received an average of only $100 in state aid, that would mean an additional $11.4 million in taxes."

Opponents of Question 2 also argue that the amendment would lead the way for the future passage of additional private school legislation, including tax credits for the parents of private school students, student vouchers and full assumption of private school Chapter 766 (special needs) students.

"We will lack any kind of protection for 94 percent of the funds put out at the state and local level," Adelstein said.

Adelstein said one thing people should be aware of is that "there is already a law on the books that requires the lending of textbooks to private school students."

Enacted in 1973, the law was ruled unconstitutional by the state Supreme Judicial Court in 1978. But if the ballot question's proposed amendment passed, the injunction could easily be removed and the law re-enacted, Adelstein said.

Wheeling and dealing like the major leagues

By Andrew P. McCloy

WALTHAM — "How much for Clemens?"

"Seven bucks."

"I'll take it."

What? Roger Clemens, a shoe-in for this year's Cy Young Award, sold for seven bucks?

Believe it. What's more, the Mets and Red Sox — the whole team — could be purchased for a paltry $6 apiece.

Don't run for the check book yet. The Olde Towne Team isn't for sale.

But at the Waltham VFW last week their fate, one might say, was in the cards.

More than 200 ordinary people turned out for the chance to talk and act big-time — negotiating contracts, trading players and haggling over baseball cards like general managers attending the Major League draft.

"This is big business," proclaimed organizer Tom Shaughnessy. "Buying baseball cards is probably as good as any investment you could have made in the past year. You can make a living at it."

You certainly can. The card of Honus Wagner, a shortstop for the 1910 Pittsburgh Pirates, is the most expensive. Only seven or eight are known to exist. The card is worth $20,000.

Roger Clemens' card probably is the most popular in the country right now, according to dealer Fred Suzman, of East Providence, R.I. Clemens' card from his rookie year in 1985 costs $7, while one from his minor league years at Pawtucket runs closer to $12.

"When a player wins an award, the value of his card increases substantially," Suzman said. "Clemens' rookie card will go up to $10 if he wins the Cy Young Award. And the same is true for any other player."

Those attending the event also had the opportunity to peruse and purchase baseball cards, bats, memorabilia, old jerseys, autographed balls — you name it. If it had to do with baseball, it could be bought.

But the main attraction was the cards.

Every year, about one million cards bearing the face of each American and National League player are printed, according to Suzman. In addition, about 5,000 cards are produced for minor league players each year, he added.

"There aren't as many minor league collectors," he said. "But if a player does well, his minor league card becomes very valuable."

Baseball cards appeared sometime around the turn of the century in the form of tobacco cards. At first, they were sold with packs of cigarettes.

But during World War I and for a short time after, the production of baseball cards ceased. Sometime in the 30s, companies began printing the cards. And the Topps Company, the maker of the modern-day baseball card, commenced operation in 1952.

That first set of cards printed in 1952, according to Suzman, is worth about $20,000. The 1952 card of Mickey Mantel, one of the greatest ballplayers to ever wear Yankee pinstripes, sells for $3,000 today, said Suzman.

As you can see, that shoebox full of cards up in the attic just might be a small gold mine. Too often baseball card collections are discarded as trash by people unaware of there value. Just ask Stan Grabowski.

A Newton resident, Grabowski collected cards throughout his youth, acquiring about a thousand by 1939. Gehrig, Ruth, and Dimaggio were among the names that graced his collection. Today, he estimates, the collection would be worth over $100,000.

Today, Grabowski no longer has the cards.

"When I went to college, my mother cleaned out my closet," he said. "And all the baseball cards went out in the trash. I still tell my mother, 'You threw away my retirement.'"

But that won't happen to Grabowski's son, Mark. During the event, father and son were looking for those sought after cards to round off 9-year-old Mark's collection.

In two years, Mark has collected over 10,000 cards, which he values at $500. You can be sure Mark's mother won't throw away his collection. Afterall, she gave him his first set two years ago.

"My mom gave me a bunch of cards, and I've just built on them," Mark said.

"It's a good investment," his father added.

Thirteen-year-old Peter Kokinda, Jeff Burke and Steve York, both 12, and all from Wayland, sat down and spread their newly-purchased cards out before them.

"It's addictive," Kokinda said of baseball card collecting habit. "I try to go to shows every month."

"I want (Mets rightfielder Darryl) Strawberry's card," said York. "I would kill to get that card."

"It all started with my father buying me packs when I was little," Burke added. "Now, I continue to build and add 'em to my collection."

Kokinda looked at his newest addition, an autographed picture of the 1947 St. Louis Cardinal Marty Marion, and said, "This is a dream. It's sort of wierd. This guy's dead now, but I have his autographed picture."

Backman slams possible surtax repeal

NEWTON — Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline-Newton, spoke against the repeal of the surtax which has been approved in the state Senate.

"There can be no real surplus requiring a tax repeal while 158,000 children and their 80,000 mothers are living below the poverty line on AFDC," Backman said.

"Let us remember that back in 1971, the AFDC grant to poor children was 10 percent above the poverty line. Today, 15 years later, the so-called surplus is at the expense of families who are not sharing in the prosperity of our state," Backman, chairman of the Senate's Human Service Committee, said.

Backman said, "In addition to the 238,000 children and mothers living in poverty, the state still has too many other unsolved human services problems to consider cutting taxes. Our elderly and disabled persons cannot get the home care and respite care they so desperately need. Children are still living on adult wards of mental hospitals, and community mental health resources are inadequate and inappropriate."

Auburndale compost program on hold

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Discussion of a controversial leaf-composting program was put off Monday night because Auburndale residents, who oppose the idea, could not be notified in time to attend the Finance Committee meeting.

The delay probably means the city and the state will be unable to launch the program this year, proponents said.

They showed up because the city had finally received a letter from the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) saying the proposed location for the for the composting program — the city's old Rumford Avenue landfill — is safe.

The letter arrived around 5:10 p.m. Monday — too late to schedule a FinCom hearing.

Chairman Paul Coletti said he was surprised by the presence of DEQE officials, Department of Public Works (DPW) Commissioner James L. Hickey and members of the Mayor's Recycling Committee.

Coletti refused to hear them, saying he had promised Ward 4 Alderman Polly Bryson he would take no action without hearing from her constituents.

"One side is here and the other isn't," Coletti said. "It isn't in our best interests to take it up."

The aldermanic Public Facilities Committee (PFC) at its Oct. 14 meeting had requested the DEQE letter as a condition of its 5-to-1 vote in favor of the plan. Bryson cast the negative vote.

The DEQE's Bureau of Solid Waste has been hoping to use the Newton site and another location in the western part of the state as a model for other communities. The bureau hopes to develop a manual instructing other cities and towns how to build and manage composting sites as a means of turning leaves into topsoil.

But aldermen must appropriate $12,000 to cover the city's share of the costs.

Auburndale neighbors fear the city will not effectively manage the composting program and that it could become a hazard and a nuisance.

Only the company hired to collect the city's trash would be permitted to deposit leaves there during the initial phase of the program, but later private contractors may be allowed to do so, Coletti said. It is this aspect of the plan that has him concerned.

When a similar program was tried at Cold Springs Park in Newton Centre years ago, private contractors ended up mixing trash with the leaves, he said.

Hickey urged FinCom to vote the issue this week so it can be sent to full Board of Aldermen next Monday night. The proposal has been before alderman since March, he said.

"Vote it up or down. The leaf season is now," he said. "You can't put this off until December or January. I heard one alderman say, 'You can't compost snow.' And you can't."

Bryson was attending a PFC meeting elsewhere in City Hall, but Ward 4 Alderman Richard McGrath carried the neighbors' cause and raised some objections of his own.

"Never once was I called to participate in the development of this issue and it's going in my backyard," he said.

Auburndale neighbors who live near Rumford Avenue landfill have had to endure more than their share of troubles from the city, he said.

Pointing a finger, he charged Alderman Rodney Barker would not allow the city to dump debris from Hurricane Gloria last year at Cold Springs Park. Instead, the city used Rumford Avenue and burned mounds of the debris, arousing neighborhood complaints.

"It's my area, an area I represent just like you represent the Hyde School," said McGrath.

Alderman Wendell Bauckman supported McGrath, saying Monday night was of the few times in his more than 40 years on the board his mind had been changed in the middle of debate.

Aldermen need time to study the DEQE letter, he said. "I can see clearly that a letter delivered ten past five is no good until tomorrow morning," he said.

Hickey said he has no control over the timing of a letter from the state and he did not "strategize" to hold the hearing at a time when neighbors opposed to the project could not attend.

"Yes you did," McGrath said.

"You are wrong, as you usually are," Hickey responded.

John Schall, recycling director for the DEQE, said the time for collecting leaves was approaching and if the matter was not reported out of FinCom to the full board soon, the program could not be started this year.

"The leaves will be under the ground, not composting," he said. "You should be clear on the decision you're making."

Coletti said he would try to schedule a special meeting when both neighbors and the program's proponents could express their view. But it is possible FinCom will have to delay considering the issue until its next regularly scheduled meeting in two weeks, he said.

Big Brothers fete volunteers

NEWTON — Since 1919 the Jewish Big Brother and Big Sister Association, a constituent agency of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies, has been providing adult companionship, positive role models and life enriching experiences to children from predominately single parent homes.

Throughout the years thousands of children have benefited from the voluntary commitment made by Jewish men and women who were willing to give a few hours of their time a week to befriend a child.

During the association's 67th Anniversary Brunch, which will be held at 9:30 a.m. on Sunday, Nov. 2, on the Gosman Jewish Community Campus, these volunteers will be honored with a special award.

Karen Novakoff and Alan Glickman, co-chairpersons for the brunch, also announced that the morning's festivities, which are being sponsored by Reebok will feature a presentation by active Big and Little Brothers and Sisters that will highlight the morning's festivities.

Adams explodes as Tigers win thriller

By David Cuddy
Staff Writer

NEWTON — One man, a 5-6, 155-pound senior halfback, did it all Saturday. Mark Adams was truly the Mark Adams of old.

Newton North's diminutive offensive weapon finally exploded, and Dickinson Stadium is still rocking after Saturday's all-star performance that lead to to the Tigers' second straight victory, a 28-20 thriller over visiting Cambridge, Rindge & Latin.

Adams ran around, over, through, and in between the Cambridge defense on his way to 224-yards rushing and three touchdowns. It was just what the doctor ordered against a much-improved and offensively-potent Cambridge crew.

The beauty of Adams' game-winning performance — which included a 55-yard pass reception, a 40-yard kickoff return, and one two-point conversion — was that it looked effortless.

One look at Adams' stat sheet would turn the heads of most coaches, but not his coach. The forever optomistic Peter Capodilupo was pleased, but not surprised.

"Mark is capable of doing that," Capodilupo said of his star halfback. "He's got a big heart — a great heart — and he played a wonderful game."

Adams, a 1,000-career yard rusher coming into the season, was slow to start the year because of nagging injuries, but the senior running back is apparently 100-percent recovered.

He came into camp with a sore ankle, the result of a lacross injury last spring, and he racked up his knee in the season opener against Watertown.

He missed the Brockton massacre entirely, then came back against North Quincy on one day's practice. It was last week against Everett — Newton's first victory in five tries — that Adams turned his season around.

"A fan in the stands wouldn't say he did that great," Capodilupo said of Adams' 55-yards rushing against Everett, "but he gained some tough yardage."

And then there was Saturday. Adams ran free all day and probably could have continued into the night. With an average of 6.2 yards a carry, he surpassed the 100-yard mark by halftime and hit the 200-yard barrier early in the fourth quarter.

Capodilupo was quick to credit Adams' supporting cast. A rebuilt offensive line and some fine blocking from fullback Ed Lin and halfback Joe DeNucci contributed to Adams' excellence.

Jim Brashears was back at guard after missing several games with an injury, and converted tackle Chris Lawless handled the other guard position. In Lawless' spot, sophomore Mike Olson started his first-ever game and rose to the occassion.

"As a whole, the line did well," Capodilupo said. "Some early penalties hurt us, but we kept coming back."

The game plan going into the game had been ball possession. In order to beat the explosive Cambridge offense, Newton had to keep the Cantab unit off the gridiron. It's not too often a plan works to perfection, but Saturday there were no major flaws in the Tiger game.

"I had said before the game that if we controlled the ball we'd be okay," said Capodilupo, whose Tigers ran 57 plays from scrimmage opposed to Cambridge's 41.

"The kids just rose to the occassion," he said. "We knew they had three talented athletes in the backfield who could break one at any time, and we made up our mind that if they did break one that it wasn't going to break us."

Penalties stalled both teams for the duration of the first quarter, but both Newton North and Cambridge ran free for the remainder of the half.

Cambridge, which had broken one big play in the first quarter, jumped out ahead on another big gainer.

On a third-and-nine from his own 35, Cantab quarterback Dennis Vigilante hit Jon Tynes across the middle and the speedy receiver booked it all the way down to the Tiger 10-yard line.

Vigilante would later sweep right for four yards to light the scoreboard, and Gary Ezell added the kick for a 7-0 lead two and a half minutes into the second quarter.

Newton came alive. Sparked by a DeNucci 33-yard kickoff return and three long runs by Adams — the last being an 18-yarder for the touchdown — Newton North pulled within one point before turning to its defense.

Led by linebackers DeNucci and Evan Galanis and linemen Brian Claflin and Neil Hatem, the Tiger defense stuffed Cambridge on three straight plays to hand it back over to the Adams Express for one more shot before halftime.

Adams sandwiched six carries around a DeNucci 23-yard burst to bring the Tigers to the Cambridge three, then let DeNucci enjoy the rest. The sophomore halfback bulled ahead to the goalline, then took it over the top and in for a 12-7 lead.

A Galanis fake kick and a Joe Proia to Dennis Rohanna completion put the Tigers in business, 14-7 at the half, and Newton North would not lose the lead. It did get close, though.

Cambridge pulled to within one point on a Ronnie Lamming to Waldy Clark pitch for 48 yards, but Newton North came right back with 75-yard drive capped by an Adams' two-yard TD rush and the ensuing conversion.

The Cantabs refused to concede, scoring on their next possession compliments of a Lamming 24-yard pass Lance Dottin. Ezell missed his second extra-point kick of the quarter and the Tigers lead by two, 22-20.

Newton North put the icing on the cake in the fourth quarter, scoring once on a 13-yard rush by Adams while forcing turnovers on both Cambridge possessions.

Galanis recovered a Lamming fumble on the Cambridge 44-yard line to set up the Tiger scoring drive, then Lawless picked off a Lamming offering at the Tiger five-yard line with 1:15 left to end the game.

Meng goal gives North girls title

NEWTON — Senior Ann Meng scored the only goal of the game for Newton North, and it was enough to defeat Brookline, 1-0, in girls' soccer action Friday. The win clinches the Suburban League title for Newton North (13-0-1) for the 12th time in the past 13 years.

Meng's goal came 19 minutes into the second half, when a corner shot by Kendra Daley went right to Meng, who promptly booted it into the Brookline net.

The Newton girls have had but a single goal scored against them this year. They play their final game of the season Thursday at Cambridge, which is the only team North hasn't beaten this season (they tied last time they met).

Brockton repelled

The Brockton girls' soccer team turned heads when it scored on Newton North en route to a 2-1 defeat, as Newton protected its undefeated Suburban League record at home on Wednesday.

To any other team, having their opponents score one goal in a game would be be nothing unusual. However, the Tigers have grown to be a bit more perfectionistic.

Tiger goalies Marie Farrar and Gretchen Young had yet to let even a single goal pass through Tiger posts until Wednesday.

Newton North took control early in the game, with senior wing Amy Drew breaking open the scoring less than a minute after the kickoff.

Co-captain Ann Meng gathered the ball near the sideline and ripped a quick pass to junior Angie McKenna. McKenna spun by her defender and passed to teamate Amy Satter.

Satter took several shots on net which bounced off Brockton goalie Lynne Yenush. Amy Drew collected the ball and punched it in for keeps.

The Tigers ramained in control for the remainder of the half. After 40 minutes of play, the Tigers had fired 22 shots at the Boxer net while Brockton managed only two.

Four minutes into the second half, Newton scored its final goal of the afternoon. Katarina Victoria lofted a corner kick to Ann Meng, who passed to co-captain Kendra Daley for the score.

With 20-minutes left in the game, Brockton marred the Tiger's perfect un-scored-upon record.

Brockton stopper Noelle Lehrer made the ball soar by North goaltender Gretchen Young from an indirect kick 30 yards out.

This goal sparked the Boxers, and they turned on the pressure cooker. The Boxers and Tigers each aimed eight shots at their opponent's net in the second half.

Tiger goalie Young showed poise as she protected the victory to the very end. With less than three minutes left in the game, the Boxers were awarded an indirect kick for a tripping foul to Brockton halfback Enid Sweeting.

Brockton stopperback Noelle Lehrer fired a hard high drive to the upper corner of the Tiger net. Young jumped from the other side of the net to make the save.

Tiger mentor Fuzzy Howland was quick to praise his team's play, saying his girls played "super."

"They worked hard and showed a lot of dedication today. We have a young team and everyone really came through for us."

Howland believes his team's depth gave it an edge over Brockton, "We have 25 players, so we were able to have a lot of subs."

Ball handling skills were another important asset for the Tigers. "This year we've been able to play a more controlled, passing game, instead of just kick-and-run."

"This is the best team I've ever had. They are excellent in offense and defense, and especially in the midfield transition; the team can work together. They have the skills from playing in the girl's soccer league when they were younger."

Howland also praised the Tiger captains, Kendra Daley, Ann Meng, and Marilyn Schultz for their leadership and ability saying, "They are excellent athletes and role models."

Along with control and leadership, aggressiveness was another Tiger forte. Fullback Katherine Vignatti made several tough slide-tackles, and Stephanie Koontz helped clear the ball several times with her head.

Howland was especially happy with the Tiger's second goal which was scored off a corner kick. "We had been working on that in practice, so I was glad we could pull it through."

Howland said his defenders Kathering Vignatti and Becky Howland had both played "outstanding" games, preventing Brockton from penetrating to the goal.

Amy Drew and Amy Satter played well on the attack, as did center halfback Heather Hughes, "Heather did a good job of controlling the middle. The center halfback has to cover a lot of space."

But with a record as impressive as the Tigers, Howland said that sometimes his team felt pressure.

"The girls showed grace under pressure today– it was a moral victory when they held on to the win in the second half." He added "We don't want to worry about states until we win the Suburban League Title– that's our goal right now."

Captains Meng and Schultz said, "people always expect us to do well. Right now we just want to take it one game at a time."

Newton North in 3-0 loss to Weston

By Daryl Frazetti
Sports Correspondent

WESTON — It was a wild afternoon for the Weston Wildcats Tuesday as they trounced the Tigers of Newton North, 3-0, in field hockey action.

The Tigers came prepared, but got taken back a bit in the first half of play. Filled with real team spirit, the Tigers dug into action. However, the Wildcats proved to be a worthy opponent, digging in just as hard.

While the Weston team ran away on many breakaways and had great penetration up the middle, Newton North held strong. The two teams spent much of the time grappling for ball control deep in Tiger territory. Holding up the fort for Tiger defense was goalie Val Mulhurn, backed by Lisa Rossiter.

The Wildcats bit through though, and put the first point on the board going up 1-0 on a goal by Abby Matckin.

The Tiger team found it tough-going throughout the half. They weren't managing to get the opportunities to run the ball upfield and break into Weston grounds. Weston's offense dominated play.

However, the Tigers did show some great defensive abilities. Again, it was Mulhurn stopping shots, along with defender Amy Jessup.

On one scoring attempt by the Wildcats, the shot went up but a good sliding save on the part of Tiger goal, Mulhern held them.

Weston made another fast drive, and after a diving block by Tiger Amy Jessup, the ball deflected into the left side of the net and Weston was up by two. Thus ended a frustrating first half for the Tigers. Felicia Moschella of the Tigers, sidelined with an injury, commented from the bench. "We had a slow first half. No one ran the ball. They weren't hungry enough in the circle."

The second half showed a different Tiger team. Players Jennifer Goldstein and Alexa Korosi agreed. They said their team played with "strong spirit, and worked together."

During the last half of play, Val Mulhurn played a big role again as the Tigers this time were able to make some penetration on the Wildcats. Unfortunately, the Wildcats proved to be the stronger team on defense and killed the few real drives made by the Tigers.

Early in the half, Weston came out strong. The Wildcats were able to hustle down field and toss in one more for a total of three points.

The Tigers held them extremely well the rest of the way though with outstanding stick slapping blocks and great defense by Lisa Stichweh and Lauren Queler. Tiger co-captain Becky Veduccio had a strong game as well, according to her teammates.

South loses

It was a heartbreaking loss for the Lions of Newton South as they slid to a 7-1 crushing by Concord-Carlisle.

The Lions struggled, giving up four goals in the first half. Concord had complete field domination, and drove through the Lion defense. Lion goalie Kerry-Anne Kelly played well, but just wasn't able to hold off the offensive attacks.

In the second half of play, the Lions came alive with team spirit and seemed as though they would take control. Captain Sheila Wilcox played well, while trying to lead her teammates in a surge. Somehow the plan of action gave into the outstanding Concord defense. The Lions fell. Suddenly the Patriots took advantage and hit for three quick goals to take a 7-0 lead.

The Lions took a time out. They re-grouped on the sidelines. It showed on the field. Quickly they pressured the Patriots, drove deep into the oppossing territory, and put themselves on the board with a penalty stroke.

Scoring for the Lions was sophmore Mary Rowe.

Lions sputter, Bedford wins

By Ted Rooney
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Newton South finally looked as if it was beginning to jell. The Lion defense was shutting Bedford down Saturday at George Winkler Field and the offense was showing signs of life, combining the run and pass with suprising efficiency. All this staked the Lions to a 16-0 halftime lead. Then they had to play the second half.

The South offense sputtered and Bedford came storming back, literally running all over the Lions as they would finish with 310 yards rushing, and scoring 26 unanswered points in the second half to record the win, 26-16.

"The first half was good," said South coach Art Kojoyian. "But we made some mental errors and received some crucial penalties in the second half."

"It was a great comeback by our kids," commented Buccaneer coach Armand Sabourin. "We're not a great team, but we're not as bad as we showed in the first half. We were just a little flat."

South played possibly its best half of the year in racing to the 16-0 lead. Neither team threatened on its first drive, though on its second drive South drove 72 yards to Bedford's 13-yard line, only to be stopped there. When Don Campbell broke upfield for 32 yards to the 45, it looked as if the Lions' woes were going to continue again this week. Herman Rice carried twice for nine yards, and Pat Jarvis carried once for five. After a five-yard penalty quarterback Tom Bauman completed a pass to Mike Shamon for 18 yards to the Lion 28-yard line. Campbell ran for three yards, and the next down Rice had apparently gained five more, but he fumbled, and the Lions recovered at their own 20-yard line.

The oppurtunity seemed to give South new life, and it plowed through the Buccaneer defense. Leroy Browne carried for two, and T.J.Rhone broke up the sideline for 20 yards, aided by an excellent block by Browne. After four rushes gained 10 yards , a penalty lost the yardage for the Lions. But Ben Burlingame split two defenders and completed a 22-yard pass to Jeff Brewington at the Bedford 36-yard line, and four more rushes carried South to the Buccaneers' 23-yard line.On the next down Burlingame lofted a perfect pass to T.J.Rhone for the touchdown with 3:15 left in the half to complete the drive. Rama Malone rushed in the conversion for an 8-0 South lead.

Good luck would visit the Lions again. On the following series Bedford reaced its 49-yard line only to fumble when Bauman lateralled the ball over Bobby Roberson's head, and South recovered on the Buccaneers' 42-yard line.

Three rushes gained 10 yards and Burlingame went to work again. First he completed an 11-yard pass to Brewington, who made a one-handed grab. On the following play Burlingame completed another pass to Brewington, this time for 21 yards and a touchdown with 42 seconds remaining in the half. Burlingame upped the lead to 16-0 by rushing for the conversion.

The Lions' luck seemed as if it would never end when Bedford fumbled after only four plays on its opening series of the second half. South recovered at its own 42, but were unable to gain any yardage and had to punt, which Bedford returned to its own 40-yard line.

At that point any magic South had evaporated. A late hit and unsportsmanlike conduct penalty advanced the Buccaneers 30 yards to the Lions' 30-yard line and left Kojoyian wondering.

"I don't see how they could add on unsportsmanlike conduct," he said. "The kid didn't even say anything to referee."

In five plays Bedford scored, finishing it on a five yard run by Jarvis with 4:26 remaining in the third quarter. A failed conversion attempt left the score at 16-6.

The Lions embarked on another excellent drive, only to see it eventully fail. They reached the Bedford 29-yard line, but after a Browne run for no gain, a sack of Burlingame, and an incomplete pass they had to punt, which was a touchback. The Buccaneer took over on their 20-yard line.

Two runs only gained three yards, but on third down Campbell streaked up the sideline for 62 yards, finally being pulled down at South's 15-yard line. Three more runs only gained six yards, though, and Bedford was faced with a fourth down. Needing a touchdown, Bauman found a wide open Dave Bauman for a touchdown with 7:16 left in the fourth quarter. The failed conversion attempt kept the score at 16-12.

"That was a damaging mental error," Kojoyian said. "We didn't execute our coverage, and it cost us."

It wasn't time for panic quite yet on the Lions' side, though. Get the ball back, run it for about 50 yards, waste enough time off the clock, and the game would be theirs. Unfortunately, they never got a chance, for while Brewington was returning the kickoff he was jolted and fumbled, and Bedford recovered at South's 32-yard line. Rice rushed for nine yards and Campbell rushed for 20 to carry the Bucs to the three-yard line. Tom Bauman punched it in from the three and after a Danny Couto extra point Bedford lead 19-16 with 6:05 left in the game.

The Lions would have one more chance. After returning the kickoff to their 30-yard line, they picked up 13 yards on three plays for a first down. They could not gain a first down on the next set of downs, though, falling a yard short. Bedford took over and scored on six plays, all rushes, the drive ending when Rice scored from five yards out. Couto added the extra point and Bedford had finished the job, leading 26-16 with only one minute remaining.

North booters stay in flag chase

By Tom Whitestone

NEWTON — The Newton North High School Tigers scored two first half goals and added a third late in the second half to handily defeat the North Quincy Raiders, 3-0, Thursday at the Newton North Field in a boys' soccer game. The victory keeps the Tigers in the hunt for the Suburban League lead and it assures the Tigers a bid in the post- season state tournament. They are now 8-3-4 and remain two points behind Suburban League leader Brockton.

The better skilled Newton North squad had little trouble controlling play but as had been the case in previous games that fact assured no victory. "We've been playing the best soccer we have all year. Yet, we need this game to get back on the winning trail," commented Tiger head coach Roger Brown before the game. The Tigers were winless in their last three games, losing two and tieing the other.

Again Thursday, Newton played fine soccer. Facing the wind in the first half, co-captain Josh Albert advised a controlled tempo. "We have to keep the ball on the ground," he called to his teammates. The Tigers followed that advice by using a short, quick passing game to avoid the wind.

Suburban league scoring leader Steve Bourland again was the key to the Tigers offense. He scored the first goal on a header off of a long cross from Albert. The cross, coming from the right side, drew the North Quincy goalie off of his line and found Bourland crashing in from the left side. He easily headed it over the keeper and into the net. That goal came 15:40 into the game.

Bourland set up the second goal 20 minutes later. His feed from the left corner found Rick Olstein in front of the goal. Olstein slid the ball back to the left to Phil Vasiliades. Vasiliades pushed a shot through a pile of defenders and into the net to give the Tigers a comfortable 2-0 lead.

While Bourland and company were putting on a clinic in the offensive third, the Tiger defense, led by stopper Zafar Khan, limited the Raiders to just one shot in the first half. North Quincy did use the wind effectively to create quick counter attacks but the Tiger defense was able to shut those attacks down.

The second half was much the same. Without the wind the Raider offense was stymied while the Tigers openned up by shooting at will. With Albert, Bourland and Vasiliades controlling the play the Tigers appeared to have taken up residence in the Raider zone. Somehow North Newton was denied a goal for 34 minutes as their shots riddled the parking lot behind the net as if they were practicing shooting drills.

With 6:00 minutes left Albert added the final goal. After taking a pass from Mike Partridge, Albert beat two defenders and headed for goal. He placed his shot just inside the post in the opposite upper corner to put Newton North up 3-0.

With that the Tigers had iced the victory Coach Brown felt they so badly needed. "We played just as well as we've been playing but we finally had a little more success. This should get us back on track and give us more confidence."

With just one game left, against Waltham on Wednesday, and the state tournament awaiting this win may have come at precisely the right time.

Tigers stumble

The magic number has stalled at one for the Newton North boys' soccer team. The Tigers dropped a tough 2-1 game Tuesday to Brookline in Newton despite a powerful second half showing.

"We were confused defensively for the first 20 minutes," Tiger coach Roger Brown said. "We started to turn it around at the end of the first half," but by then Brookline had a 2-0 edge that would prove to be insurmountable.

The cost of Newton North's early defensive confusion was a Brookline-dominated first half. The ball was kept in Newton's side of the field for most of the playing time, and Brookline players Jordan Bloomgarden and Chris Dunham were able to score the first two off Tiger goalie Greg White rather handily.

Bloomgarden's goal came when he rebounded a White save on the right side of the perimeter and knocked it into the vacant upper-left corner of the net.

Ten minutes later, off a left-corner shot, Dunham headed a riser straight away from 10-yards out into the goal over White's head.

Before the half ended, Newton North's Matt Scales was able to take a chunk out of the lead when a shot by Mike Partridge from 5 yards away on the right side bounced off the hands of diving Brookline goalie Kevin Kleinfeld. The ball rolled to Scales directly in front of the net, and he promptly fired it point-blank past the sprawled-out Kleinfeld.

That was all the scoring misfortune-plaqued North could muster, despite a second half in which the Tigers ruled defensively, imprisoning the ball in Brookline territory for virtually the entire half.

During that time, the offense was unable to capitalize on several scoring opportunities. The Brookline defense was tight in the perimeter, tying up any potential short shots, and on at least three occasions outside shots that seemed perfectly set up went just wide of the Brookline net.

The lack of scoring wasn't representative of Newton North's talents. The team clearly outplayed Brookline in the latter half, and if calibre of play were the basis for scoring a soccer game, the Tigers would easily have come out on top in this one.

South swimmers humble Quincy

QUINCY — Angela Brisk prevailed in the 100 and 200-yard freestyle, and Wendy Meltzer came out on top in the 200-yard Individual Medley and 100-yard breaststroke to lead the Newton South girls' swim team to a 97-68 victory against Quincy Friday.

Brisk's time of 1:03 in the 100-yard freestyle qualified her for the sectionals, and Meltzer's scores in the Individual Medley and 100-yard breaststroke put her in the sectionals and the states, respectively.

Cappello, Clark pace PeeWees

BURLINGTON — John Clark scored five and a half minutes into the second period and goaltender Marc Cappello stopped 29 shots as the Newton AA PeeWees edged out Burlington, 1-0, Sunday in Middlesex League hockey action at the Burlington Ice Palace.

The teams entered the game locked in a first-place, both with untarnished record. Now the only mark on Burlington's record is Clark's goal.

The speedy forward accepted a Chris Asher pass at the Burlington blueline, split the defense, then drew goalie Greg Damani out of the net before depositing the shot.

Newton was playing without five of its regular starters because of injuries and sickness.

Newton Midgets

Eight different players scored Wednesday as the Newton Midgets topped Reading, 10-1, in Middlesex League hockey played at O'Brien Rink.

It is the first win in four tries for the two-time defending state champion Newton squad.

Steven Silk scored the prettiest goal of the night, slapping a cross-crease flip from Greg Burke for his second goal of the game. Burke had taken a pass from Mike Kornitzer.

Burke scored twice in addition to his assist, Kornitzer added a goal to his two-point total, Dan Monbouquette scored and assisted on two others, Jim Rizza and Dom Bianchi both had a goal and two assists, and Chris Pike and Doug Proia added one goal each.

Wessel is Falcon of Week

WALTHAM — Paul Wessel of West Newton, a senior on the Bentley College football team, has been named "Falcon of the Week" for his record-breaking performance in the Falcons' 35-13 Homecoming Day victory over MIT Saturday.

Wessel, one of Bentley's tri-captains, caught three passes for a school-record 160 yards abd two touchdowns to to help the Peter Yetten-coached Falcons remain undefeated (5-0). The 160 receiving yards broke the mark of 116 set earlier this season by Steve Grimwood.

Wessel's first touchdown, a 55-yard strike from freshman Kevin Lucey, gave Bentley a 22-6 lead late in the second quarter.

Late in the third quarter, he combined with Lucey for the longest pass in Bentley history. The 97-yard reception also matched the longest play from scrimmage since the Bentley program started in 1972.

A senior wide receiver, Wessel also became the college's all-time leader in receiving yards, surpassing teammate John Copponi. With three regular season games remaining, Wessel now has 65 catches for 1,094 yards while Copponi has pulled down 67 passes (equalling the Bentley standard) for 1,055 yards. This season, Wessel has seven receptions for 231 yards and three touchdowns.

A 1983 graduate of Newton North High School, Wessel is majoring in general business. He is the son of Roger and Maureen Wessel of 233 Highland Ave., Newton.

Newton South girls assume spoilers' role

NEWTON — Newton South played the role of the spoiler, also, as the Lions forced visiting Weston into a 1-all Dual County League tie on Wednesday, putting the Wildcats into a situation in which they would need to win their three remaining games to qualify for the tourney.

The Lions have given Weston trouble all season. Earlier in the year, the pesky Newton South group battled the Wildcats scoreless for 72 minutes before Nicole Kondi scored to pull out to the Weston victory.

It was Kondi again who spoiled a possible Newton victory.

After a goal by Kathy McBride on a direct kick from six-yards out midway through the first half, Kondi tied it up. The clubs then locked horns for a scoreless second half.

"We were a little bit nervous coming into the game," admitted South coach Chuck Hurwitz, "but Kathy's goal took a lot of pressure off us."

McBride blasted a direct kick through a wall of players lined up on the goalline at the 25-minute mark. Maura Raider had taken an in-close pass in a pack from Neda Armian, but Raider was kicked in the head by a Weston defender and a dangerous play and a direct kick was called against the Wildcats.

McBride, from six-yards out, was forced to either go through a wall or over it, and the sleek scorer did it the hard way, bouncing a shot through two sets of legs and into the net.

Weston tied the score with three minutes left in the half when a misfired direct kick found its way to Kondi at the 18, and she booted it home.

Bedford halts Lions

It was a hard loss for the Newton South girls' soccer team on Friday as the Lions went down by the score of 2-0 against Bedford.

The first half of play was highly intense and saw the two teams in a scoreless lock. Then, suddenly, with only seven minutes left in the half, Bedford surged. Breaking the deadlock was Kim Arcaide, giving Bedford the lead.

The second half of play was just as hard fought. Newton South struggled hard to hit the goals. It just wasn't the Lions' day however, as their kick attempts kept bouncing off the uprights and crossbars.

Jill Goldberg and Kathy McBride did their share by holding back the Bedford players and knocking a couple off the posts of the goal, thus keeping their offensive drive alive.

For Newton South it just wasn't in the cards. Bedford came away on a fast breakaway move and put away the game with their second goal.

Bentley nips SMU in title match

WALTHAM — In times of war, the most unlikely become heroes. Third-string quarterback Dave Taylor was a hero and, yes, it was a war. Unbeaten Bentley College rallied behind Taylor Saturday to post a hard-fought, 12-7 victory over previously undefeated Southern Massachusetts University in a game that should decide the the New England Collegiate Football Conference Championship.

The Falcons jump their record to 6-0 with two games remaining while conference foe SMU drops off the unbeaten list at 5-1. All Bentley has to do is beat 1-6 Merrimack (Saturday at the Bentley Athletic Field, 1 p.m.) and 0-7 Roger Williams to claim the title.

First thing was first. Beating SMU was no easy task as Falcon head coach Peter Yetten or any one of his bruised players can tell you. This matchup had the intensity of a championship game, and both clubs doled out enough hits, scratches, and claws to account for 180 total yards in penalties.

The story though, was a Bentley come-from-behind victory. After gaining 83 total yards to SMU's 165 in the first half, Bentley turned it around to post 199 second-half yards and 15 first downs while holding the visitors to 48 yards and four first downs.

Taylor, third on Bentley's depth chart, was forced into action after freshman QB Kevin Lucey left the game with a sprained ankle, an injury he had suffered last week and that kept him out practice most of this week.

Taylor grabbed the reigns and, in addition to scoring the winning TD on a 14-yard option run with 12:26 remaining, the backup from Hanover, Ma., ran for 38 yards and completed two of four passes for 31 yards.

He went untouched into the end zone following a seven-yard gain on fourth down that kept the drive alive.

The Falcons took charge the rest of the way. On SMU's next possession, Bentley's Mike Skalla recovered a fumble at the Falcon 39 to kill a drive.

In the final eight minutes, Bentley held the ball for all but two plays — and the two plays that SMU had ammounted to nothing when Rich Douglas pulled down his fifth interception of the season.

Bentley had taken the early lead on a Dan Campbell 37-yard field goal set up by a Mike Coogan fumble recovery.

SMU took the lead with 4:28 left in the half on a Criag D'Amario 18-yard jaunt down the left side. The drive covered 57 yards following a Scott Oullette interception of a Lucey pass.

The Falcons managed to close the gap before intermission, getting another Campbell field goal for the 7-6 score. Bentley had started the drive in good field position, but following three Lucey incompletions from the SMU 13, Campbell came in and booted the 30 yarder for three points.

Holland powers Lancer volleyball sweep

NEWTON — Mary Holland served nine consecutive aces in game two to lead the charge for the Newton Catholic volleyball team as they pummeled Sacred Heart in straight matches, 15-5 and 15-3. The win puts the Lancers in a three-way tie for first place in the Catholic Suburban League with only one game remaining in the regular season.

Before Sacred Heart even scored, second server Angela Canty piled up six unanswered points and Michelle McLaughlin followed with four more on the way to an 11-0 tally in game one.

After Holland's 9-0 explosion in game two, the girls rallied behind the talents of standouts Linda Leary, Jean Deffely and Karen Leary to emerge victorious, bringing their record to 11-2.

St. Pat's hex ended

Newton Catholic moved into a three-way tie for first place in the Catholic Suburban League with a two-game sweep over visiting St. Patrick's Friday, marking the first time the Lancers have ever beaten the Knights.

Newton Catholic won the first game, 15-11, as Angela Canty scored five points.

Karen Leary led the way for St. Pat's in that game, as her high energy level and enthusiasm helped give her teammates hope to continue battling.

Battle they did, but Newton Catholic held on enough to grab a second victory, 15-9.

South dropped

The absence of two starters was a major cause of defeat for Newton South, as Cambridge, Rindge & Latin took a two-game sweep over the Lions, 15-2 and 15-3.

Laine sparkles in field hockey in Connecticut

NEW LONDON, Conn. — Michele Laine, a resident of Newton and a graduate of the Winsor School in Boston, recently scored her second goal of the season to lead the Connecticut College field hockey team to a 3-2 win over NESCAC-rival Amherst College.

Laine tipped in a pass from teammate Sue Landau of Brookline, also a graduate of Winsor, for the Camels' first goal of the game.

A two-year letter winner on fourth-year coach Peel Hawthorne's team, Laine was a starter on last year's 10-3-1 season in which Conn. was ranked ninth in the final New England Division III poll.

The Camels are 4-1 on the 1986 season with wins over Wesleyan (3-1 in double overtime), Mount Holyoke (6-1), Bates (3-2 in overtime), and Amherst. Conn's only loss was a 1-0 decision to Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

A dean's list student, Michele is a history major and the daughter of Melvin and Janet Laine of Newton.

Newton Squirt A's get off to fast start

NEWTON — The Newton Squirt A's are off to a fast start in Middlesex League play registering impressive Youth Hockey wins in their first two starts over Woburn (8-1) and Winchester (5-0).

Both games were complete team efforts in which 11 players accounted for the combined 13 goals. Individual scoring honors went to Matt Murphy who garnered the season's first hat trick against Woburn. Murphy later teamed up with Andy Ingham in the Winchester game in which both tallied a goal and an assist. Decisive goals were added by Maxwell, Green and Thompson.

In view of the stalwart defensive play of Martinez, MacDonald, Jakubowski and McGowan and near perfect net minding of Teddy Raspeck, Newton may will be the team to beat in its division.

It's time to winterize the garden

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Leaves are littering the landcsape as cold winds whisper of winter's approach, a time when many home gardeners put their feet up and relax, even though they should be planning ahead for spring.

Clean up, lime or mix the garden soil, plant lawn seed, tend your outdoor equipment and bring in plants that aren't hardy enough for the weather, garden experts at the U.S. Department of Agriculture say.

Let's start with the lawn.

The department says this is a good time to plant grass seed. Research the type of grass wanted, depending on climate, expected use of the lawn and whether it is sunny or shady. The local county extension service agent would be a good source of information on this.

Turning to the garden, some folks may still have greens such as collards, kale or turnips growing. Work around them; cold and snow enhance their flavor.

Otherwise, clean up plant material, destroy any plants which are diseased or infested with insects — the plant material could help these pests survive the cold weather.

Save healthy plant material, though, and dig it back into the soil or mix it in compost.

Leaves can make good compost, and shredding them with the lawn mower will help work them into the soil.

The Agriculture Department says this is a good time to have the soil tested. Fertilizers can cause soil to become too acid, while added material such as calcium and organic materials can make to too alkaline.

If lime or organic matter is needed, add it now and it will blend into the soil over the winter.

Plow or spade in the lime or compost roughly. Rain, snow and the freezing and thawing cycle will break down the clods. Soil plowed in the fall usually needs only raking before spring planting.

This is also a good time to correct any drainage problems, perhaps by raising the beds. But leave enough space between beds to walk through.

Equipment that will be stored until spring needs cleaning. Wash off tomato stakes and cages.

After removing dirt from tools, oil a cloth and rub them down to retard rust.

Both lawn mower and garden tractor engines should be run until out of fuel or drained of gas. Otherwise the gas will evaporate over the winter, leaving behind gummy deposits that will affect the engine in the spring.

It is a good idea to remove the spark plug, put some oil in the cylinder, turn the engine over to spread the oil, and replace the plug.

Finally, take care when bringing in plants for the winter — inspect them first so as not to bring along insects which can multiply quickly in a warm house.

If you still have some green tomatoes on the vine, pull the whole vine and hang it upside down in the basement or other cool place to give the fruit time to ripen.

Judging a house

By Rheta Grimsley Johnson
Scripps Howard News Service

Every year Memphis homebuilders have a contest to see who built the best house in town.

They asked me to help judge the $125,000 to $150,000 division, and I agreed. It's not as good as judging barbecue, I thought to myself, but few things are.

Each team was to have three people — two knowledgeable about construction and architecture, and one ignorant person to judge strictly by gut instinct.

I have a Ph.D. in gut instinct.

The rules specified we were to ignore all furnishings and concentrate on the house itself — such things as overall plan, energy efficiency, landscaping, recreational facilities and, of course, the important etceteras like toilets and kitchens.

They gave the three of us official clipboards and pencils, and we began a tour of 12 houses.

I don't know about you, but I'd run out the back way if three strangers walked up to my front door at 8 a.m. holding clipboards and pencils. I'd figure my mother sent them.

The residents of these show homes, however, all seemed fairly glad to see us. One woman said she had planned to serve brownies but decided against it after noting we were to arrive just after breakfast. I gave her high marks for good intentions.

I found it nigh to impossible to ignore furnishings. While the other judges checked the attic for insulation, I stood and stared at wedding pictures, diplomas, book titles and record albums. Those are the things, after all, that make a fine home fine. Not R-19 fiberglass batting.

One house had no yard. The builder said that was intentional. That he built these special no-lot homes for a certain kind of person.

"Nine out of ten people who buy these homes only want to see grass on the golf course," he said.

He sold four of the homes in the development to airline pilots. I suppose he'll have no trouble selling the others to buyers who prefer big bathtubs and a lot of mirrors on the walls.

But my gut instinct told me if you paid $150,000 and got no yard, you'd been clipped.

Every house we toured but one had a "great room" instead of a formal living room and a less formal den. Homebuilders must have clapped their hands in delight when the "great room" concept came along. One less room to worry about building.

But if I paid $150,000 for a house, I'd want at least one room to try and keep the children out of.

My favorite house was the one that had real wooden doors. Not many new houses do these days.

Seems to me builders sink too much money and effort into bathrooms. All the homes we toured had bathtubs as big as the shallow end at the YMCA. Most of the tubs were set up on a stage, as if bathing were a dramatic act. I could do with a little less drama and porcelain in the bathroom, personally.

Most of the kitchens had "islands" floating somewhere in the middle of them. As best I could tell, kitchen islands were first charted so women would have something to hang their expensive cookwear above; they make no sense otherwise.

By the time we finished rating the 12 houses, I had developed my own scoring system. If the lot had at least one tree, I rewarded it grandly. I also smiled on big closets, wooden floors and being able to look out the window without seeing clearly the activity in the house next door.

I'm not sure which house won. I just hope it wasn't the one that had plants growing in the fireplace.

Mulching in time to the seasons

By William C. Bayne
Scripps Howard News Service

All plants benefit from some protection against winter freeze.

Usually, the larger the plant, the less likely it is to receive a fatal blow from winter, but all can benefit from some mulch around the base and on top of the ground covering the drip line — the area of ground the plant will shade at noon.

Tom Oswalt, a horticulture expert with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Extension Service, said, "The area from the base of the plant out to the drip line is the area that will receive the most damage if it is not protected."

He noted that mulched ground might not be much warmer than unmulched soil, perhaps as little as three or four degrees. "But that can be a very important three or four degrees. The plant is much better off at 33 than when its roots are at 29, for example."

He added that mulched soil "cools off more slowly and warms up more quickly" than unmulched soil. "This is very important to plants. It's not the cold, itself so much as it is the prolonged exposure to the cold that's damaging. The quicker they can get back above freezing, the better."

If you have no leaves with which to make your own mulch, shredded newspapers do very well, although they absorb fewer of the rays of the sun and therefore do not provide as much heat benefit.

Some areas of the country are blessed with a number of other products that provide excellent mulching material.

In parts of the South, cottonseed hulls are great for the heat absorption and the retention of moisture in the soil. There is a drawback in that often the cottonseed hulls contain weed seeds that can prove to be a headache when spring growth begins. The material is readily available from a number of local gins and many companies deliver the material at reasonable rates.

Pine bark mulch is an excellent all-purpose mulch with an added benefit: It is normally clean of any type of seed. The mulch can be built up around such plants as rose bushes as protection from the freeze and can be spread around the plant in the spring. It is a very slow deterioration mulch and is not as acidic as oak leaves or pine needles, which deteriorate at a more rapid rate. It is sold in a number of garden shops and discount department stores in the garden shops.

Well-rotted sawdust is an excellent mulching material — especially for protecting against freeze and for its absorption of sun rays. However, it can be "too hot." It can give off too much heat as it deteriorates and it can provide too much acid for plants to handle easily. It serves well as a spot mulch for really severe winter weather, but probably should be cut with sand or other soil if used as a long-term mulch.

Inorganic mulches such as shredded automobile tires, gravel, brick chips or crushed stone may provide a more attractive mulch, but generally they will offer less protection from the cold (since they don't oxidize as they deteriorate, there is no heat benefit). They do an excellent job of holding moisture in the soil. They also have the benefit that they are a decorative type mulch and, used well, can contribute to the overall beauty of the lawn or garden.

Inorganic materials may be available in garden shops, but brick yards and building materials businesses also may provide some useful materials.

A note of warning: Oswalt said mulches used to cover bulbs and rhizomes in the fall plantings should be removed by late February to keep the plants from coming up too quickly.

"Many times the mulch is left in place and the plants sprout up too quickly. Then a late hard freeze comes along and zaps the plants. It's best to use the mulch, but take it off the plants by late February. By then, most of the need for protection is over and the ground has enough time to gradually cool off and allow the plants to come up at the proper time." (William C. Bayne is a reporter for The Commercial Appeal in Memphis, Tenn.)

Unrecognized poisons are lurking in your home

By David Hendin

There are more than half a million different kinds of dangerous medicines, cleaning aids, cosmetics, pesticides and other household products that have been swallowed by children. Your home contains hundreds of them, and many of them are not even recognized as poisons.

This year, some 250,000 children will swallow poisons. Half of them will be seriously injured, and at least 200 will die. Will your child be one of them?

Fully 95 percent of the reported poisonings have occurred when the children supposedly were under the supervision of parents or other adults. You must poison-proof your home — and do it today. Don't postpone this simple, vital task. For further insurance, you must learn some basic first aid measures.

Remember, children will eat and drink almost anything. When a child finds something new, it often goes right into his or her mouth. You must teach your child as early as possible not to put things into his or her mouth.

Medicine is not candy. Never call it that to entice a child to take it. Make it clear to youngsters what medicine is and that it should be taken only when a parent gives it.

Child-resistant caps on medicine bottles, mandated by Congress in 1970, have dramatically cut the number of poisonings. However, 36 percent of prescription drugs swallowed by children under age 5 now involve a grandparent's medication, probably because grandparents often request bottles with regular tops for convenience. Grandparents should use child-resistant bottle tops whenever children may be around.

Here are some more suggestions for poison-proofing your home:

Keep all products in their original containers. If you put chemicals into soft drink bottles, milk bottles or cans, your child may mistake poisons for healthful products.

Pour discarded products down the drain and rinse the container before you throw it away.

Make sure your medicine cabinets are locked or well out of reach.

Do not be overly confident of "child-proof" caps; your child may figure them out.

Clean out or lock under-the-sink cabinets and accessible shelves in other storage areas.

Keep your child in sight, especially in the homes of older persons, where medications are likely to be left in the open.

Aspirin is by far the most common poisoner of young children. Other common ones are: other medicines; soaps, detergents and cleaners; disinfectants and deodorizers; insecticides; bleach; and glues and adhesives.

If you think your child has swallowed poison, immediately call your nearest poison control center for advice.

Window cleaners are doing the job

By the editors
of Consumer Reports

Cleaning windows thick with city soot and grit is easy with a good commercial glass cleaner. But for suburban soil, a homemade cleaner will do nicely — and save you money, too.

That's what Consumer Reports' chemists found after testing 23 widely distributed glass cleaners, along with their own home concoction.

The home cleaner is made from ½ cup of sudsy ammonia, a pint of rubbing alcohol, a teaspoonful of liquid dishwashing detergent and enough water to make one gallon.

The chemists used the cleaners to remove a stubborn brown glaze, made by baking cigar smoke onto glass panels.

While the chemists' homemade cleaner was only an average performer, at about a half cent per window, it was considerably cheaper than any of the commercial products. If your windows are only lightly soiled, as many are in the pollution-free countryside, it will do the job.

But if your windows are grimy from urban air or heavy smoking, you'll want the ease and performance of a good commercial cleaner.

Of the supermarket products tested, the aerosol Savogran Dirtex Spray Cleaner scored best, but not by very much. More than half the products made quick work of the tobacco glaze.

While the Savogran Dirtex cleaner was top-rated, it was also one of the most expensive products to use, costing 14½ cents to clean a 32-by-48-inch window. For economy, choose the A&P, Revco, or Arrow window cleaners; they did the same size window for about 5 cents. Lady Lee and Trewax cleaners were only a shade more expensive, roughly 6 cents.

Other good performers were K Mart Window Cleaner and the aerosol version of Sparkle Glass cleaner, both at about 8 cents per window; Walgreens Window Cleaner, at about 8½ cents; and Windex Glass Cleaner (the blue liquid version) in the trigger pump, at about 9 cents.

Certain brands that are available in several kinds of packaging were not all equal in performance. For instance, Sparkle in an aerosol can, did considerably better than Sparkle in a trigger-pump bottle. Easy-Off Lemonized also differed slightly in its trigger-pump bottle and aerosol versions, with the trigger-pump bottle cleaning a little better.

The chemists found similar differences with the various Windex products, too. In a trigger-pump bottle of blue liquid, it was near the top of the ratings; in a aerosol can, about midway; and in the trigger-pump Lemon Fresh version, it was at at the bottom.

Some pour-out brands, although decent performers, were somewhat clumsy to use. Cost Cutter liquid is poured directly onto a wet paper towel — not hard certainly, but a shade inconvenient. Glass Wax requires two steps, which is rather time-consuming. After wiping it on the glass, it dries to a powdery haze that must then be wiped away. Glass Wax was also one of the most expensive cleaners to use.

Although aerosols are slightly handier to use, pump-sprays have advantages, too. They tend to be less expensive, and many offer bottled refills at a saving per fluid ounce of anywhere from 20 to 50 percent off the original pump-bottle price. Some pumps offer a stream position on their nozzles, which can be helpful in special cases. Stream has a longer reach than spray and is more controllable on narrow surfaces.

The chemicals in glass cleaners may harm vulnerable surfaces, as a number of their labels warn. To see how much damage the cleaners might do, the chemists tested them overnight on five common surfaces. None stained green formica, stainless steel or white enamel housepaint. But Arrow and Glass Plus slightly spotted blue automobile paint, and A&P and Walgreens marked aluminum a bit. To be on the safe side, always quickly remove drips or spray from any non-glass surface. (C)1986, Consumers Union.

Termite trouble can delay home sale

By Tim Urbonya
San Francisco Examiner

Although you can't see them and you'd probably rather ignore them, millions of tiny termites may be posing a threat to the sale of your home.

More and more lenders are treating inspections for pest damage much in the same way as an appraisal: You have to get one before you can get a loan. Generally, that applies to both a new home loan and when an owner wants to refinance an existing mortgage.

In the past, most banks required such inspections, but in recent years an increasing number of savings and loans and mortgage brokers also have made them prerequisites to getting a home loan.

Lenders want to make certain the property is in good condition in the event of a foreclosure. Take, for example, a $200,000 home with a mortgage covering 80 percent of the appraised value, or $160,000.

If the lender forecloses only to find the home in need of $15,000 in repairs for pest damage, the lender's loan-to-value ratio increases to 86.5 percent, since the effective value of the home is now $185,000.

Like property appraisers, pest-control inspectors have been swamped with business in recent months because of an increase in home sales caused by falling mortgage interest rates.

Failing to schedule a pest inspection or repair work well in advance — particularly in today's hot housing market — can cause further delays in getting a home-loan approved, pest-control experts say.

"We're not as backlogged as the appraisers, but the work has all come at once," says John Munro, director of education for the Pest Control Operators Association of California. "It's not nearly as hard getting an inspection as it is getting the work completed. That's why it's important for the seller to have an inspection done as soon as possible so they don't have those last-minute surprises."

Pest-control experts estimate that about one-quarter of the homes they inspect will have structure damage from termites, dry rot or moisture, with repair costs ranging anywhere from several hundred to several thousand dollars.

Typically, the buyer pays for the inspection, which can cost between $25 and $200 depending on the size of the home and the company. Termite-control companies encourage homeowners to schedule an inspection before they put their home on the market, particularly if it is old.

But real estate brokers disagree. Sales agents contend that while it makes sense for a homeowner to take care of such problems as they arise, there is no advantage to the seller to have the home inspected before a buyer has been lined up.

More often than not, says Ray Brown, vice president of Majestic Realty in San Francisco, the buyer will want to do his own inspection.

"I recommend that sellers get an inspection if I've seen obvious signs of damage," says Brown. "That still doesn't mean the buyer is going to believe the report. Most of the time the buyer is going to say, 'Thank you, but I'll do my own inspection.'

How to pick pest control company

By San Francisco Examiner

Here are some tips on how to choose a company to inspect your home for termites and structural damage.

— The best way to find a reputable company is to ask friends and neighbors about a firm they have used. If you are selling your home, chances are the real estate agent will be able to recommend a company. If all else fails, look in the Yellow Pages under pest control.

— Shop around. Prices for inspections vary, depending on which company you are dealing with and the size of the home. Inspection costs can range from $25 to $200. However, don't let the price of an inspection keep you from choosing the best company. A $200 inspection may be a small price to pay when you are negotiating with a lender for, say, a $160,000 home loan.

— Getting a second opinion may be wise, especially if the first inspection shows that substantial repair work is needed. Different pest-control companies often have different — and sometimes less costly — ways of dealing with the same problem. Again, a second inspection may be well worth the price when the estimate on the bid for repair work is in the thousands of dollars.

— You are under no obligation to give the repair work to the inspecting companies. In fact, many of the pest-control companies do not make major structural repairs. In that case, you will have to select a contractor to do the work.

— Don't relax once you've selected a company. When structural damage is being repaired, keep an eye on the workers as they go along to make sure they are tackling the problem decribed in the inspection. The quality of the work should be at least as good as the original construction. For example, if the floor of the home is repaired, tiles should still line up and the surface should be smooth.

— If you have a complaint about the repair work, first try ironing it out with the company. Ask to speak with either the owner of the company or a supervisor, not the person who performed the work.

Two Brookline residents honored for their work in Israel

BROOKLINE — The Greater Boston Council, Na'amat USA of Brookline will honor two outstanding citizens for their work in Israel and with Na'amat at the annual Spiritual Adoption Luncheon held Nov. 19, at the Park Plaza Hotel in Boston.

Sophie and Haim Rejman of Brookline, have served a life of giving to others and have been Na'amat USA members since its inception.

Natives of Poland, the couple worked hard to establish the state of Israel, by smuggling Jews out of Poland to Palestine.

They arranged a system of creating "marriages" in order to double the number of Jews able to escape Poland. Many Jewish people were safely transported and once in Palestine, the marriages were considered void.

In 1936, anti-semitism in Poland was rapidly escalating and Sophie and Haim wanted to go to Palestine, but were refused. They escaped to Buenes Aires, Argentina and continued their work for Israel. Sophie worked as a dressmaker, sending one day's wages per week to Israel. During this time they gave birth to a son, Zev, and daughter, Dora. They too worked hard to help Israel.

While in Argentina, the Rejman's established the Na'amat of Argentina, which is still in existence. Two years after Israel became independent, 60 Na'amat families left Argentina together.

Zev and Dora were taught English in school and Sophie and Haim at Na'amat centers.

The Rejman's continued to work for Israel and Na'amat USA. While relating these happenings, Haim commented, "What I've told you about is only a drop in the bucket. Our experiences would fill a book." He added, "Sophie and I have worked together all our lives, never thinking about receiving, just to give, and we have been happy."

The Rejman's moved to Brookline 21 years ago, and since that time Sophie and Haim have been contributing to Na'amat as members of the Greater Boston Council.

Dora Rejman will give the invocation during the Luncheon. She and her husband, Dr. Rubin Leopold, have three children and are presently living in Washington.

Zev Rejman lives in Brookline with his wife and two children.

Proceeds from this affair will benefit the Children's Fund.

For information about making donations in honor of the Reiman's call 731-8378.

AT YOUR SERVICE

Quality craftsmanship and weight are both very important considerations when purchsing silver table settings. Flatware should be well balanced, somewhat heavy, and have good proportion. Flatware is most often bought by place setting, with eight or twelve being the usual number of settings purchased. Each setting consists of a palce knife and fork, teaspoon, salad fork, and a dessert spoon. Some place settings add the individual butter spreader as a sixth piece. Additional place pieces might include soup spoons, dinner knife and fork (larger and more formal than the place knife and fork), dessert forks, coffee and/or demi-tasse spoons. To complete the set, matching serving pieces are available.

A fine jewelery store contains more items than the customary jewels. Here at CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" we have beautiful gift items that will not be found elsewhere. You can choose an exclusive 144 facet diamond which is graded 32% more brilliant than ordinarry 58 faceted diamonds. Our showroom displays all of our items beautifully for you looking pleasure and we don't use high pressure tactics. So stop in Tues, Wed, Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9 at 109 Dalby St., Newton. 'Dining Room' serves slices of life

By Candy Kosow
Correspondent

NEWTON — The next time you sit at the dining room table, take a moment to reflect on all the conversations, meals and gatherings you have had in that room. The memories of a certain romantic evening or the way the room smells on Thanksgiving will come flooding back. The more you think, the more you realize that, except for the food, the dining room is not a dining room at all, but more of a "living" room. That is the premise of former Newton resident A.R. Gurney, Jr.'s "The Dining Room," which serves up slices of life for its main course.

The show features six actors, who portray 57 different characters, in vignettes that flow in and out of each other. Characters who are played include precocious children, adulterous parents, senile grandmothers, teenagers who steal from the liquor cabinet, servants from various geographical locations, a psychiatrist, an architect, and a real estate agent. The audience becomes the fly on the wall as we take brief glimpses into the lives of these people. We hear about their problems, share their joys, but mostly, we see life.

Once again, director Larry Lane has staged a well-paced piece. The action moves along at a gallop, which certainly holds the audience's attention. Sometimes, however, the play is so quick that actors' character changes become confusing. The actors wear the same clothes throughout the show (somewhat modified with accessories) so a true distinction between characters was sometimes lost in the shuffle.

The play's concept of staging all the action around people's dining rooms results in a show that is well-balanced between family events and several ordinary times in the life of our characters.

Each cast member does a good job of changing character in short — only a few seconds — period of time. J. Davis, Albert Ruesga, Jeff Lyons, Kathryn Lubar, Paula Plum, and Chloe Leamon deserve credit for their varied performances.

The best ensemble scene centers on a family gathered for a holiday dinner. The senile grandmother does not recognize her children, or the fact that they are having dinner in the same dining room she's eaten in for decades.

Her three sons try to remind her of days gone by by singing to her in three-part harmony. When the grandmother insists on going home to the house she grew up in as a little girl, her sons try to tell her that her old house is now an office building, but the elderly woman just won't listen.

The reluctant sons are forced to put the dinner on hold, and take their mother for a drive to the former site of the old house. As the son's wives stay behind to put the turkey back in the oven, they share some sister-in-law laughs about having married into this family, and then set off to have a cocktail with the cook. It's heart-felt, humorous and a situation that many can relate to.

"The Dining Room" is the first play of the 1986-87 season for the New Repertory Theatre, the Theatre in Residence at the Newton Arts Center. The show runs through Nov. 16.

Murals exhibit at gallery

NEWTON — "Conjunction Incantations," Brian Swift's exhibit of figurative photographic murals, will be shown at Chapel Gallery from Oct. 30 to Nov. 23. The public is invited to a reception for the artist on Saturday evening Nov. 1, from 6 to 8.

Chapel Gallery is located in the former Youth Chapel of The Second Church in Newton at 60 Highland St., West Newton. It is one block south of Washington Street and three blocks east of the West Newton exit (exit 16) of the Massachusetts Turnpike extension.

Admission and parking are free. Open Thursday through Sunday 1 to 4 p.m., in conjunction with events at the church and by appointment.

For further information, call 332-7782 or 244-4039.

Library offers services for disabled individuals

NEWTON — "Resources for the disabled are included in the Newton Free Library's Social Services," says Barbara Moskow, the Newton Free Library's Social Services librarian.

The resources at the Main Library offer help to those with special needs and include a Talas magnifier, braillers, large print and braille books, magazines, games, talking books and an Ednalight, a magnifier with lights on a stand.

One of the Library's frequently used resources is a TTY — a telephone for the deaf. Other resources include a talking machine, a talking book deposit collection on loan from the Perkins Regional Library, the "New York Times Large Type Weekly" on tape and service to shut-ins.

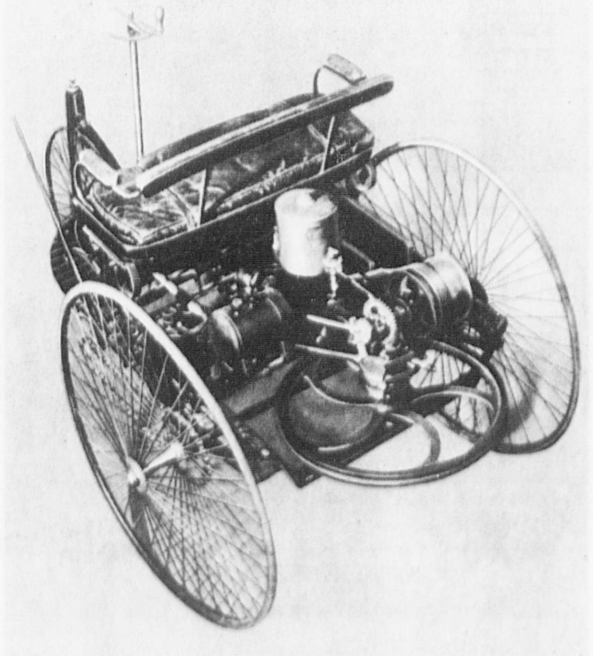
Many library materials can be delivered to patrons who live in Newton but are unable to leave their homes.

Barbara Moskow also has information about the Library's Kurzweil Reading Machine, a supplementary reading device that provides access to printed and braille materials. The machine contains a scanner which transmits printed matter to the computer which in turn, changes the images into sound.

The visually impaired can participate in the Bridge Club, attend book reviews, poetry readings, lectures and other special events sponsored by the Library.

For further information call the Library at 552-7145.

The Main Library is open Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Friday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; and, Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.



A Three-Wheeler antique auto to be displayed at the 30th Annual New England International Auto Show Nov. 1-9 at the Bayside Exposition Center.

Mercedes to be showcased at car show

BOSTON — The 30th annual New England International Auto Show is pleased to announce that Mercedes-Benz will showcase the world's first gasoline-powered automobile, the Three-Wheeler, at the Auto Show's centennial celebration of the automobile.

The Three-Wheeler was created by Karl Benz of Mannheim, Germany and was patented on Jan. 29, 1886. The Three-Wheeler, powered by a .9-hp single cylinder engine could hit nine m.p.h. Sixty miles away in Cannstatt, Gottlieb Daimler, months later, built the first four-wheeled car. In 1926, Benz and Daimler's companies merged and thus began a century of Mercedes-Benz craftsmanship.

The Auto Show will take place at the Bayside Exposition Center, exit 15 off the Southeast Expressway, Nov. 1-9.

THE SINGLES ADVISOR

RAYMOND J. CABOT, LCSW

Attempts to help friend may be waste of everyone's time

The Singles Advisor
By Raymond J. Cabot, LCSW

Dear Ray,

My own social life seems to be going pretty well. I've started an intimate relationship with a man who is intelligent, charming, sensitve, a marvelous lover and he has a lot of other positive qualities.

When my husband and I split up two years ago, I didn't know that finding a compatible man was supposed to be a problem for middle-aged women. I just tried many ways of meeting people, read a number of books about "singlehood" issues and concerns and eventually met this special man.

My problem is one of my girlfriends. Lisa and I have been friends since our college days. She went through a divorce five years ago and still hasn't met someone with whom she can form a relationship. She states that this is what she really wants, but that it hasn't happened for her as yet.

Lisa is quite attractive, intelligent, shapely, has a good career and she is an interesting and sincere person. However it seems that no matter what I suggest as a way of meeting men she rejects it. For example, when I suggest singles groups she says that the people in these groups are losers. When I suggest singles dances she says that all the men just stand around. When I suggest dating services she says that they are too expensive and don't provide results. When I suggest personal ads shw says that they don't work. I would really like to help Lisa, by I don't know what else I can do and I feel like I have let her down.

N.C., Needham

Dear N.C.,

An axiom that I coined recently is "Virtue is its own punishment." How often in doing a good deed or trying to help someone else do we find our virtuous action backfiring?

What you have done is to exercise control over you own social life. Apparently you made it a priority to learn, practice and to take positive actions to find what you wanted. People can usually understand these concepts when it comes to career goals or education or other parts of their lives. However, when it comes to one's social life, people often find it easier to just complain that to apply reasonable approaches to solving a problem.

Lisa may really believe that she wants to find someone, but this may be merely an intellectual form of denial. For five years she has been saying that there is no suitable way of meeting men, and I'm sure saying that there were no suitable men for her as well. From her perspective, she is correct. No way and no man will be acceptable to her. This period of five years has been preceded by perhaps many years of a poor relationship with the man she was married to before divorcing. It should not be too surprising to anyone that the projection of a negative attitude and negative belief system to the singles world will result in a self-fulfilling prophecy. She will continue to experience only negative reinforcement.

She might learn from your experience, but it appears that she has chosen to ignore and deny what you have done. You can continue to frustrate yourself by trying to help someone who emotionally rejects your help or you can recognize what is happening and get on with your own life. You can continue to be her friend and to be close, but you might want to discontinue giving advice. When she asks for help you might simply suggest that she try what you have done and leave it at that.

Do you have a question about dating and relating and learning to function as a single adult? Send it to: The Singles Advisor, c/o Transcript Newspapers, Box 69, Waltham, MA 02254.

Fifth annual hunger walk set for Nov. 2

NEWTON — The fifth annual Newton Hunger Walk will be held on Nov. 2, beginning at 1:30 p.m. from the grounds of the United Presbyterian Church, Newton Corner.

Marianne Talis of Newton Highlands and Irene Egan of Auburndale are serving as co-coordinators of the fifth annual walk.

The emphasis on hunger began this year on World Food Day — Oct. 16 — when the community focused on the needs of those who are ill-fed.

Those who walk will be asking their friends, neighbors and coworkers to sponsor them by pledging an amount for each kilometer walked. The walk is 10 kilometers in length.

The sponsors will have the option of designating their contribution to any of 13 hunger-fighting organizations including Catholic Relief Services, the American Friends Service Committee, American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, CARE, Project HOPE, Heifer Project International, Mennonite Central Committee and World Relief Commission of the National Association of Evangelicals.

This year 25 percent of the funds received will remain in Greater Boston, with 15 percent going to the Roxbury Food Cupboard and 10 percent to the Newton Food Pantry.

The walk is staffed by volunteers and no administrative costs will be deducted from the amount raised. Those wishing to participate in the walk or to sponsor a walker should call either 527-4469 or 244-2097.

DPW needs residents' cooperation

NEWTON — The Newton Department of Public Works is making efforts to continue to improve the quality of services provided to residents of the city. In order to achieve this goal, the city's administration needs your full cooperation. Please read carefully the information provided below.

Trash Pick-up.

While the DPW has been making efforts to beautify the city and keep it clean, these efforts are often thwarted by trash which is improperly place for collection.

Trash should be placed outside for collection after 4 p.m. of the day preceding collection, and before 7 a.m. on the day of collection. The trash barrels should be removed from the area of collection prior to midnight of the collection day.

Trash for pickup should be placed between the sidewalk and curb, and not on the sidewalk or roadway, so as not to impede safe use of walks and streets.

All trash should be placed in suitable plastic bags or containers. Brush and other such materials should not exceed four feet in length, and should be securely tied in bundles. Large items such as stoves, washers and refrigerators may be placed out for collection on the regular pick-up day.

Recycling

Recycling is not only environmentally sound, but is also a financially sound practice. It reduces the city's cost of trash disposal and thereby saves tax dollars. During the past fiscal year, nearly 4,000 tons of paper was recycled in the Garden City. Thanks to all who regularly participate in the recycling program. Residents, who do not yet recycle, are urged to do in order to conserve our natural resources and to achieve greater tax savings.

Newspaper, magazines and phonebooks should be either tied in bundles or placed in double grocery bags for trash pickup. Paper for recycling should be placed on either side of your trash. When a winter snow storm is forecast, do not put paper out for collection since it is easily buried in the snow. During holiday weeks, paper will not be collected on Saturday.

Residents whose regular trash collection day is Friday are requested to save the paper for collection the following week.

The Department of Public Works (DPW) is pleased to announce that in approximately one year, with the assistance of a state grant, it hopes to expand the curbside recycling program to include the weekly collection of glass, cans and aluminum. As soon as the planning for the program is finalized, information will be sent to each household in the city.

Election day ballot questions and answers

Question 3: Limiting tax revenue increases

Do you approve of a law that would limit increases in state tax revenue?

Tax cap proponents

Encourages smart spending

By Larry Grady
Staff Writer

"Don't let them spend it faster than we earn it" sums up the attitude of Citizens for Limited Taxation (CLT), which gathered signatures from 155,670 voters to get a tax cap petition on the November ballot.

At the moment the state has a revenue surplus variously estimated at between $600 million and $1 billion.

CLT Executive Director Barbara Anderson says, "Our tax cap proposal and signatures was before the Legislature last December. They had ample opportunity to act, but waited until the last minute trying to derail our petition.

"We want the voters to send a strong message in favor of reasonable and fair restraints on state spending," she said. "When the voters approved Proposition 2½ by a 60 percent margin, the legislators got the message and that's why Proposition 2½ survived for six years."

A "Yes" vote on Question 3, she said, would reaffirm the voters' desire to repeal the 7.5 percent surtax as well as limit the growth of tax revenues to the average increase in wages and salaries in the state.

If the tax cap had been in effect for fiscal 1986 (last year), state government would have been allowed to increase its revenues by $562 million — in proportion to the increases of wages and salaries. But it would have returned to taxpayers $510 million in excess revenue in the form of tax credits for the following year, Anderson said.

The latest tax package calls for the surtax to be totally eliminated this year, retroactive to last Jan. 1, thereby saving taxpayers about $135 million in 1986. CLT was unable to amend its referendum and include a similar provision.

Supporters of the ballot question say the Legislature can quickly pass a bill to reinstate the immediate repeal; many legislative leaders, including the chairmen of the House and Senate Ways and Means Committees, have said they will support such a move.

Tax cap opponents

No provision for bad years

By Larry Grady
Staff Writer

The revenue limit proposed in Question 3 is "far too restrictive and unworkable," according to the majority report of the Massachusetts House. "It would seriously limit the state's ability to respond to future fiscal crises."

Proposition 2½ worked, opponents contend, because of increased state aid to the cities and towns. Cities and towns now get about one-third of their revenue from state aid and one-half of all new increases from the state. "The state's capacity to keep supplying ever increasing local aid will surely be in doubt under such a cap."

Last year, the Legislature and Gov. Michael Dukakis agreed to a two-year phaseout of the tax surcharge, with half being eliminated on Jan. 1, 1986, and the remainder on Jan. 1, 1987. The latest tax package calls for the surtax to be totally eliminated this year, retroactive to last Jan. 1, thereby saving taxpayers about $135 million in 1986. CLT was unable to amend its referendum and include a similar provision.

Opponents of the CLT plan say that anyone who votes for the referendum will be reimposing the two-year phaseout — or voting themselves a one-year tax increase.

Human service providers are concerned a revenue limit will cut back on services. A spokesman for the Protestant Leadership Conference said many members fear the long-term effect will land on the poor. Besides, the spokesperson said, the "whole idea of a tax cap tends to support the philosophy that the least government is the best government, which does not look to the general welfare."

Voter registration opponents

Fraud and abuse could result

Opponents say the proposed system of mail-in voter registration carries tremendous potential for fraud and abuse.

In fact, the same concerns caused the state House of Representatives to reject the mail-in registration proposal by a 93-56 vote when it was brought to the floor on May 6.

The majority report issued by seven House members and four Senate members of the Legislature's Election Laws Committee detailed the proposed law's problems.

"Registering by mail prevents those responsible for registering voters from asking for identification of the registrant in person. Any fraudulent voting dilutes the effect of legitimately cast ballots," the report said.

"The potential for duplicate registration and confusion on election day under a mail-in system is great," it added.

The lawmakers also questioned whether a mail-in system will increase voter registration, citing the fact that the Bay State now has a higher percentage of eligible voters than more than half the states that utilize the mail-in system.

Officials responsible for local voter registration agree with those who say the proposal could set a dangerous course in elected politics.

Waltham City Clerk Peter Koutoujian, former president of the Massachusetts City Clerks Association, says the proposed mail-in system would eliminate the sense of civic responsibility attached to voting.

Public aid for private education

Proponents: Would end bias

By Lisa J. Adams
Staff Writer

A proposed amendment to the state constitution allowing public aid to private schools would eliminate an anti-Catholic bias in the current legislation as well as the "second-class" status of parochial school students, according to the supporters of ballot Question 2.

The current Massachusetts constitution contains language making it "more restrictive than the United States Constitution (on the issue of public aid to parochial students)," according to a printed statement by amendment supporters, published in a booklet by the state which includes an opposing argument.

"It was conceived in anti-Catholic, anti-immigrant bigotry during the last century when mobs were attacking convents. It remains now as an embarrassment to the people of Massachusetts," reads the published argument.

"A yes vote assures that the second-class citizen status of parochial school students will be eliminated and such students will enjoy the same status enjoyed by all children in America," the statement says.

"What we really want is fairness and equality for children and to eliminate blatant and prejudiced bias," says Gerald D'Avolio, executive director of the Massachusetts Catholic Conference, a group that supports the amendment.

D'Avolio is also a volunteer for the Committee for Educational Equality, a statewide group recently formed to fight for passage of the amendment.

The view of the amendment's proponents is that the current state legislation punishes private, especially parochial school students.

Question 4: Cleaning up hazarous materials

Do you approve of a law that would require that specific timetables and standards be met in cleaning up places where oil or hazardous materials have been disposed of ?

Opponents

Idea good; petition flawed

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — State Senator Carol Amick (D-Waltham), a long-time supporter of legislation aimed at cleaning up and protecting the environment, does not support Ballot Question 4.

"This bill has major flaws," she says. "I support the notion, but I think the initiative petition is a little naive."

Instead of spurring the state into a massive cleanup effort as Question 4 supporters believe, Amick says the petition could have the opposite effect.

"This program would be so resource intensive that it would tie up the DEQE (Department of Environment Quality Engineering) and not allow that agency to carry out other important functions," she says. "The DEQE would be forced to use a major portion of its staff in an effort to comply with the petition's requirements."

In addition, Amick opposes the petition because it does not include a funding mechanism.

"This places a greater reliance on public funds rather than private funds," she says.

proponents

Schedules control cleanup

NEWTON — The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) is supporting the passage of Ballot Question 4.

Steve Kadish, a spokesman for MassPIRG — a consumer rights and environmental protection organization — says passage of Question 4 "would best control the problem of hazardous waste in the state.

"What the initiative does is set up key timetables," he says. "Having a timetable like that would control the hazardous waste cleanup problem in a timely and responsible manner."

Kadish says the MassPIRG-sponsored initiative question would force the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) to develop a "comprehensive discovery program to identify the estimated 1,500 hazardous waste sites in the state."

At present, Kadish says the DEQE has identified only 350 of those sites.

Question 6: Voter registration by mail

Do you approve of a law that would provide a system of voter registration by mail?

Voter registration proponents

Would make voting easier

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

Proponents say the proposed system of mail-in voter registration would make voting easier for working persons, the military, senior citizens, the handicapped and commuters who can't visit local election offices.

Their effort to pass the proposal received a big boost the day after this year's September primary when all statewide Democratic winners announced their support for the concept.

"Passing Question #6 is the most important step we can take this year to involve the 1.3 million unregistered eligible Massachusetts citizens in the electoral process," the candidates said in a joint statement.

They argue that mail-in voter registration is a much simpler and easier system than the present law, which is more restrictive than that of any other industrial state because it requires an in-person appearance at municipal offices during business hours.

Question 5: Requiring use of car safety belts

Do you approve of a law that would keep in place the state law that requires use of safety belts in motor vehicles?

Opponents

Law cuts into rights

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

Those seeking the repeal of the Bay State's seat belt law see the concept as another example of governmental intrusion into the day-to-day affairs of private citizens.

Opponents argue that a vote against the mandatory law will protect those segments in the U.S. Constitution that guarantee a citizen freedom of choice.

They say state and federal governments do not have the right to dictate personal choice when no one's safety but that individual's is involved.

In addition, they argue, there is no guarantee that wearing a safety belt will prevent death or lifelong disabilities in the event of a serious accident.

As evidence, they cite studies conducted by the Center for Automobile Safety in Washington, D.C., which reveal an appallingly high level of defects in the design, manufacture and installation of safety belts.

Such defects, the Center and many physicians say, have been proven as the direct cause of hundreds of deaths and injuries each year.

Opponents of the law also accuse their counterparts of conspiring to pass the proposal as a political ploy on the eve of an election year.

Proponents

A matter of life and death

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

Those who wish to see the Bay State's seat belt law survive next week's referendum challenge believe the issue is a simple as a matter of life and death.

The proponents say the law's only goals — saving lives and preventing lifelong disabilities — are already being realized as more and more "survivors" come forward to support the concept of mandatory seat belt use.

Recent state statistics show a 23-percent reduction in serious traffic-related injuries and an 8-percent drop in the rate of vehicle occupant deaths since the law went into effect in January.

"The law simply makes sense," according to hockey great Bobby Orr, co-chairman of the "Staying Alive with Seat Belts Committee."

State's pet shop codes criticized

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

WALTHAM — Pet lovers, animal rights activists and pet shop industry officials called for a complete overhaul of the state's pet shop code during a public hearing to discuss new regulatory proposals.

The goal of the afternoon hearing at the University of Massachusetts Field Station on Beaver Street was to gather comments on suggested changes to the state regulations concerning pet shop isolation procedures, record-keeping and return policies.

But most speakers told officials from the state Department of Food & Agriculture the new proposals did not go far enough and suggested the creation of a bilateral study commission to fine tune and update the Bay State's regulations.

Several of the 30 persons in attendance suggested stipulations that would restrict the sale of animals to minors.

Others called for revisions that would require sick, diseased or injured animals to be "euthanized," or put to sleep, by a licensed veterinarian using lethal injection.

But the most direct discussion of the proposed new regulations came from N. Marshall Meyers, general counsel for the Pet Industry Joint Advisory Council, and Martha Armstrong, representing the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (MSPCA).

The potential changes would require that all dogs and cats received for resale be held separate from other animals in pet shops before being offered for sale.

They also would require consumers to have dogs and cats examined by a veterinarian within 14 days of purchasing the animals. Unless the vet certifies the animal as being "free of disease," the purchaser would be eligible for a full refund or substitution "within two business days."

The third proposed change would require pet shops to record each retail or wholesale purchase or sale of dogs, cats, "exotic" animals and parrots costing $25 or more, and keep the records on file for one year.

Such records would have to include the name and address of the person from whom the animal was obtained and to whom it was sold; the dates of such transactions; any vaccinations or treatments given the animal; mortality data; and, any veterinary services rendered.

Myers suggested that the 14-day time limit for medical examination be shortened to 10 days because the incubation period of animal diseases ranges from five to 10 days.

He said most vets would be reluctant to certify an animal as "completely" free of disease and suggested the word "apparently" be inserted.

Myers also said the "two business day" time limit for refunds is unrealistic and should be extended to 14 days because of the time needed for checks to clear.

The fact that descriptions like "parrot" and "exotic animal" were not defined also did not sit well with Myers, who noted that gerbils and fancy goldfish are technically considered "exotic."

He also questioned how pet shop owners would be able to identify and document transactions involving some animals.

"Are we going to have to keep a record on every single goldfish, every single tetra," he asked.

Myers suggested that a committee with concerned citizens, the state veterinarian, officials from the MSPCA, the Animal Rescue League and the pet shop industry as members be formed to undertake "a massive overhaul" of the state's regulations.

Armstrong, the MSPCA official, endorsed Myers' idea and added a few alterations of her own to the proposed regulations, including a section that would require pet shop facilities to isolate diseased animals from incoming healthy ones.

Several speakers who claimed to have been sold diseased pets used the public hearing as an opportunity to ask the state to investigate the care given animals sold by the Docktor Pet Center chain, which operates a store in Watertown's Arsenal Mall.

Scott Freeman, director of franchise services for the chain, said he was "somewhat discouraged" by the pet owners' comments because they created "an adversary relationship" between the consumer and the pet shop.

"It is a fact of life that animals do become ill ... Life is, in and of itself, imperfect," he said. "I believe that it's time that we begin to work together in those areas where we have mutual interests and mutual concerns."

Freeman also supported the idea of study commission to rework the state's pet shop regulations.
